

BENEATH THE BANNER ARE THE WORLD'S BEST BARGAINS

"Why can't you hunt rabbits instead of bears?"

Grand Traverse Area Appeals to Vacationers

The Grand Traverse area of Michigan is a community of comfortable contradictions. It is the north country with its lonely beauty, but with a moderate climate which belies its latitude. It is ambition and industry with a homespun air.

Here is agriculture and science growing together in thousands of cherry trees; a vacation paradise where the tourist is treated like folks around a home.

It is a happy amalgam of the past, present and future. The Michigan Tourist Council says, "It was fertile ground for Rev. Dougherty's crop, for the Indians along the west side of the bay (now Leelanau) were taken up and a village sprang up at the bay. They called it Le Grand Traverse, and so it remains."

The roots of Grand Traverse and Leelanau counties—and for brevity's sake it is necessary to limit the scope of any story about this area—reach deep into Michigan history.

Into the very warp and woof of the past is woven familiar tales of trader and missionary and the lumberman; the pattern for the future already has been traced in the first saw mill was Grand Traverse excelled to the crash and crackle of falling trees and in 1803 some 250 million feet of lumber shipped out of the bay.

Cherries like this country—but so did a handful of Chicagoans. They discovered the prevailing winds only moderately the temperatures of the area, but that Michigan these winds were scrubbed clean of dust, pollen and heat.
