

Cranbrook Corridor

By DON CUMMINGS

The annual "C" club dance, entitled "Record Masquerade," was held at Cranbrook from 9:00 to 12:00, the evening of the 14th. This year's attraction was the appearance of two bands: the five piece rock and roll band of the Swing Kings, and the eight piece orchestra of Bob DuRant. The Swing Kings are becoming very popular in this area and Bob DuRant's group has made several appearances at Denby high school.

The theme of this year's affair was also unusual: "Come as a Song." Each dancer appeared in a costume which represented the title of some musical number. With a chance to boast the power of the imagination, most of the dancers appeared in very unusual, and often hilarious, costumes. The "C"

Club Dance has usually stressed costumes; last year the theme was the "Roaring Twenties."

Refreshments were served midway through the dance. These consisted of sandwiches, potato chips, and a fruit punch. At this time, Dave Collon, president of the "C" Club, presented membership pins to those pledges who had fulfilled the entrance requirements for membership in the Club.

The decorations were carefully planned, and as a result were very attractive. The relaxed atmosphere was greatly responsible for the good time enjoyed by all who attended.

The name of Peter Dawkins, who is probably the most famous Cranbrook graduate, was brought up once more to the student body on the morning of March 10th. Al Wiestert, the famed All-American football player at the University of Michigan, presented to Cranbrook a large color photograph of Dawkins. Mr. Wiestert is now a representative of the Maxwell Club in Philadelphia; an organization which promotes better understanding and cooperation among people everywhere who are concerned with football. The Maxwell Club recognized Dawkins as this year's outstanding All-American. Mr. Ben Snyder, the assistant headmaster of Cranbrook, accepted the photograph.

Dawkins has also been the receiver of many other awards this year. He was the winner of both the Heisman Trophy, and a Rhodes Scholarship. He is currently president of his class at West Point, and ranks very high academically.

Wednesday, March 18th, marked the start of another Cranbrook spring vacation. In addition to the majority who will return to their homes in many different Michigan cities, others will travel much

Southfield High Next Time, The Class Will Listen

The old adage, "In one ear, and out the other," sometimes takes its toll in Southfield's Journalism classes. Last week startled students were told fifteen minutes after a routine announcement was read that they were to write a news item on it.

Stressing the importance of remembering details, instructor Richard and Wellenbach had Dick Jensen and Louise Calandri read the announcements, they were promptly forgotten by most of the class. Last year Wellenbach recalls that he asked assistant principal Richard Fishbeck to announce a new national ruling that schools would continue throughout the entire year except for seniors. The repercussions from the announcement were fearful for juniors and seniors were highly successful.

Mike Larson, who graduated from Southfield last year has made the Michigan State honor roll.

Two Southfield high instructors, Beermann Breachacher and Richard Miller were among the 70 Oakland County instructors who toured longer distances. The Virgin Islands, Florida, Denver, and New York, are a few examples. The vacation will extend through April 7th and will be welcomed by every one.

Southfield's future teachers are busy this week planning the outside teaching they will be doing at various schools in the community during March.

Kingswood Column

Kingswood spent a busy week voting and inaugurating next year's officers. In chapel on Wednesday, March 11, the names of the new student cabinet members were announced by this year's members. The new sophomore student is Carol Yamasaki, the sophomore boarder is Vicki Siegel, and the junior day student and boarder are Jane Lomason and Mary Liz Buckingham, respectively.

The new Student Council members were announced in assembly on Friday, March 13. Mrs. Bauer, one of Kingswood's history teachers, was asked to speak about elections. After the newly elected officers were inaugurated, the student body stood and sang the school song.

Next year Kingswood student council president will be Sara Bartholomew, vice-president will be Dorie Smith, and secretary-treasurer will be Judy Bartholomew. Marlon Mercer has been chosen to be the senior representative, Pat Holt the junior representative, Gail Peterson the sophomore representative, Beverly Fead the freshman representative, and Mary Jane Barthwell the eighth grade representative.

The chairman of student cabinet next year will be Sally Wecker, who is a member of cabinet this year. Barbara Bowen has been voted the dormitory council president. The seniors will also be members of student council, along with the head of the study halls, the editor of the school newspaper, and the president of the "K" club who will be chosen later in this school year.

After school on Friday the dormitory council held a rummage sale for the resident students. Rita MacGregor auctioned the variety of items donated by the students. The money gained will be used for the various events sponsored by the dorm council.

Many of the seniors took their college entrance examination boards at Cranbrook on Saturday, March 14.

The monthly student chapel service took place in the Cranbrook auditorium on Sunday morning, March 15. Jane Lomason, Vicki Siegel, and Rick Williams participated in the service, and Floris Nicoloff delivered the sermon. The service was followed by a coffee hour in the Page Hall.
