

Records to Rest In a Hammock By

While "live" performances of music locally go into a partial eclipse during the summer months, the record industry supplies us year 'round with an almost over-abundance of good listening. So dust off the "ole hammock" and settle down with some interesting new recordings.

Columbia this month presents Leonard Bernstein and the New York Philharmonic playing a spirited "Italian" symphony by Mendelssohn. The work abounds in carnival spirit, reflecting Mendelssohn's happy impressions of a summer spent in the Italy of 1831. Bernstein has succeeded in effecting the precarious balance between the projection of the work's serious musical content and the garland of gaiety that adorns it.

The Haydn "London" symphony occupies the reverse side. From the solemn D minor introduction, through the graceful slow movement and on to the roush finale, both conductor and orchestra have observed care in rendering all with directness and simplicity.

FERDINAND PENNARO, young American pianist who hails from Buffalo plays a somewhat unworldly record. Beginning with a controlled but uninspired playing of Chopin's heraldic "Revolutionary" Etude, he then encompasses Chopin's Nocturne in D flat, Op. 27, No. 2 with facility, but with a woeful lack of feeling. His performance of Rachmaninoff's "Moment Musical, Op. 16, No. 2 is again technically impeccable and emotionally

The Dohnanyi "Rhapsody" in C major, Op. 11 No. 3 emerges as the most engaging of the lot—here Pennaro scores in a rhapsodic over-expansive interpretation. His playing decidedly improves in such works as Poulenc's "Mouvements Perpetuels," Scriabin's "Nocturne Fur Lutz (Hans)," Op. 9; and the Paganini-Liszt work, "La Campanella."

Bizet's "Carmen" Suite is full of tunes that have become hackneyed beyond belief. On Columbia, with Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia orchestra, Bizet's gems re-emerge, refreshed and vigorous. The orchestra responds generously to Ormandy's characteristic insistence on stressing the melodic line. This recording is guaranteed to captivate those

On the evenings of May 1 and 2 in the Kingswood auditorium Stanley Bird as Phoebe Throssell, Abby Goldstein as her sister Susan, and Boris Nicoloff as the romantic Valentine Brown took the audience to Quality Street in England in 1908.

Jane Ensign, Barbara Day, and Nancy Wilcox lightened the scene in their supporting roles as three spinster ladies along with Mimi Koobbe in her role as Patty, the maid. The production staff included student director Marion Mercer, stage managers Bunny Bowen and Barbara Cripps, business manager Sue Rapke, and Judy Jacobson, Nancy Knorr, Carol Thomas, Joan Akers, Mary-Love Russell, Sally Wecker, and Nancy Tann respectively in charge of lighting, properties, sound effects, publicity, tickets, costumes, and make-up.

ful to the spirit of the original performance with a minimum of acoustical fustian. In short, for those who love the spoken word, intoned with reverence, clarity and downright musicianship, Gaiety (Shakespeare) is a must.

Reliability

Webster's Definition: RELIABILITY: Suitable or fit to be relied on; worthy of dependence; trustworthy. RELY: to rest with confidence, as when satisfied with the veracity, integrity or ability of persons.

You don't test a printer's reliability on every order you place with him. It is our belief, after 82 years' experience, that probably two-thirds of all orders placed with us are trouble-free and problem-free. Any reasonably qualified printer could produce the jobs without challenge to his reliability.

But the "third" job frequently can test a printer's reliability in one or more ways: veracity, integrity or ability.

If this "third" job happened to be YOURS, you may be interested to know how we would relate to any of the problem aspects of it.

Starting with our sales representative, you will find him qualified (he knows the technical aspects of everything that goes into the order you place with him) to anticipate many of the problem-area characteristics of your job before it reaches our manufacturing operation. You can believe him and accept his recommendations, knowing he is not just trying to sell something. It is reassuring, in these days, to know you can rely on our salesman's veracity, integrity and ability.

And next, when the job gets to our plant you can rely on us to produce it as it should be produced. You can trust us to follow your specifications; you can rely on our ability to give you the highest quality and you can believe us when we discuss any problem aspects that develop during its production. And, finally, when we make you a delivery promise, you can be confident that we will make that delivery as promised.

And the invoice you receive can be trusted. We produce over half of our orders without having to submit a quotation; this is evidence attesting our customers' confidence in us—that we are indeed trustworthy!

As your supplier we want you to know that you can always RELY on us to satisfy your every printing requirement—you can believe us, trust us and have confidence in our ability to produce the highest quality of graphic excellence.
