Into the Wild Blue for You—After a Test

The Air Force is searching the country in an effort to find young men interested in an extensive training in the field of electronics, according to a recent announcement.

Air Force officials are prepared to test large groups of those people interested. Under the program, applicants are given an aptitude test before enlistment. If qualified, the applicant is assured of enlistment in a career field of the future—electronics.

STAFF Sergeant Harold D. Holman of the Royal Oak Recruiting office revealed that the aptitude test, given only to members of the Air Force, can now be administered to qualified civilian applicants for enlistment.

"The results show an applicant's potential in four aptitude areas," the recruiter said. Electronics, mechanical aptitudes, administrative aptitudes, and general areas are covered in the test. Applicants for the test are scheduled by appointment only due to the large number of interested persons, both male and female, presently applying.

"At present," Sergeant Holman said, "we are looking for qualified men and women who score particularly high in the electronics aptitude index. Persons scoring high in this area can be assured priority for enlistment in spite of rigid quotas presently in effect." No fee is charged for this testing. Qualified young men and women of the South Oakland area may make arrangements for the special test by calling the local Air Force recruiting office at 12 1/2 South Main, Royal Oak.
