The candy pills were the most popular—they were usually gone by the day after Christmas.

These kits are still around, though slightly modernized. I think many of the boys who plan to be county doctors today are also planning to commute from the city in their sports cars.

I STILL get a call now and then for the perennial "Old Maid" card game.

"Monopoly" is going strong as ever among the junior financiers. And many a house is still filled on Dec. 26 with the acrid smell of burning wood, as some boy etches pictures on wood with an electrically-heated stylus. Now and then he burns a finger or a table-cloth too.

LEAD SOLDIERS, I'm afraid, have joined the army mule in the graveyard of the past. They've been replaced with much more ver-entirely of plastic which includes everything for a TV party—pop up toaster, electric mixer and even a candelabra for effect.

Another TV table has attached satellite, more realistic plastics.

Getting back to the missile base we have at the N.P., we have spies, too. They're red plastics. Cutest things you ever saw.

seats for four. With the top removed it folds, umbrella-like, into storage space 11 inches square.

A NEW PAIR of plastic roller skates designed for beginners has protective foot guards shaped like rabbits. The guards help support the young ankle while protecting shoes from being scuffed. The quiet-running plastic wheels can be used both indoors and outdoors. For the musically inclined child there is a large floor model electric organ.

Something new in trains is a new-priced battery-operated set in authentic o-gauge.

Coloring sets for paints and crayons are fun for the entire family. Some are in three-dimensions. A Sleeping Beauty coloring fun kit has a magic erasable slate to enable the youngsters to color the same scene many times.
