Mother Finds Son's 2-Day Visit 'Inspiring'

Campus news as reported to this section of the Eccentric is usually quiet, staid, and pretty much the same: pledges, initiations, dean's lists.

Such calm waters are pretty easily ruffled, but it took a parent of a student to do it. Mrs. Armand Isette, 16252 Elizabeth, Beverly Hills, wrote of her son Armand:

The weekend is over; We're returning to norm; Our Annie was home in his usual room. The food disappeared As quick as a wink, he and all the boys; Were plates in the sink. He came and he went With speed and with dash; He left me as listless As warmed-over hash.

He typed all his papers, My noisy big son, But glory-to-goodness, His homework got done. He listened to radio, Armand, T.V., Not one at a time— Lord help us—all three. The telephone calls— I answered each one. And all were the same: "May I speak with your son?" Yes, the weekend is over; At school he must stay Until I recover. Or just fade away.

Important news for air travelers! In fact, important news for everyone who expects trouble-free pen performance under the most rigorous conditions. The Parker 61 pen was taken aboard a Douglas DC-8 jet during an actual United Air Lines operational flight... it was proved to be positively safe from leakage from sea level to 40,000 feet at jet speeds! It did not leak... yet when called upon, wrote a perfect line as the ink flowed at a precise metered rate. Performance like this doesn't just happen—it's the result of Parker research and design that perfected a special vacuum-controlled ink reservoir found only in the Parker 61 pen. See the Parker 61 Jet Flighter model soon—it's the finest, safest pen in flight or on the ground. Other Parker 61 models from $15.
