WHAT DOCTORS SAY ABOUT:

THE "MISPLACED" UTERUS

● Internal Nervousness

Q. Please discuss trigonitis and urethritis. Could pressure from the uterus cause frequent urge to urinate? Would surgery help?—Anonymous.

A. Trigonitis is inflammation of the trigone, a smooth triangular area on the inner surface of the bladder. It serves as a sort of "flush button." Urethritis is inflammation of the urethra — the passage leading from the bladder to the outside. Irritation and inflammation of almost any part of the urinary apparatus can cause urgency and frequency. Various medicines are used to promote healing and, at times, to make the "flush button" less sensitive to bladder filling. The role of the "misplaced" uterus in causing urinary symptoms isn't too clear in many cases. Some women may have a strong and efficient retaining mechanism that is hard to upset. Others may have weaker and more sensitive systems which might be disturbed by some stressful condition such as uterine pressure. The examining physician would be the only one qualified to express an opinion regarding the possible benefits of surgery.

Q. Can a person be nervous without showing outward signs? Can nervousness cause the hair to fall out? Would drugs help? —B.

A. Anxiety and tension need not be outwardly displayed. Anxiety is present in all people and, like pain, serves the useful purpose of warning us against dangers. Trouble comes when tension increases and anxiety mounts toward panic proportions. Although "nervousness" in itself may not cause hair loss, anxiety certainly has a profound effect upon the physiology and chemistry of the body. Persons who feel inadequate, tense, and incapable of dealing with life situations need professional assistance. Doctors now have drugs which help relieve anxiety but these alone may not be sufficient. The cause of undue anxiety must be sought for and eliminated if possible.

New Sub for Navy Reservists

Original commissioning pennant from the USS Cero is presented by its wartime skipper, Capt. Edward F. Dissette, (right) to Lt. Cmdr. Harry A. Gieseking, submarine division commander. In ceremonies Saturday, the newer, more modern Cero replaced the famed USS Tambor as a training ship at Detroit's Broadhead naval armory. Capt. Dissette now commands the 2nd squadron, Atlantic Fleet destroyer force. His mother, Mrs. James Disette, 1405 Pierce, Birmingham, was presented a silver tray for her sustained interest in the navy reserve program. Capt. Dissette received a second tray from the Cero's Wardroom. Capt. Dissette's sister, Mrs. Arnold B. Newcomb, lives at 19834 Riverside, Beverly Hills.

Wanted: Blood; Do You Have A Spare Pint?

The call for volunteers—for blood—is going out again this month in Birmingham.

The Birmingham community blood bank is due to be re-stocked — or so the local committee hopes — with the visit of the American Red Cross bloodmobile.

THE MOBILE unit will be at the First Presbyterian church, Maple and Pleasant, Sept. 29, 2:45 a.m. to 8:45 p.m.

Through the community blood bank, Birminghamites can get and have gotten the blood needed in an emergency. Those who request it, can get red cross blood free of charge because of the existence of the community bank.

Terry Bird, 515 Pleasant, a student at Albion was seriously injured in an automobile accident last year. He is still in a rehabilitation program—will be for sometime.

BUT THE 13 pints of blood neeed to keep the young student alive were available when he needed them, through the Birmingham blood bank.

The recruitment committee is going all out to get volunteers, even to the point of supplying baby-sitter service at the church.

Those who wish to make appointments or ask questions have been urged to call Mrs. James B. Hincamp, 1444 S. Bates, or Mrs. R. E. Gish, 556 Puritan, co-chairmen of the recruitment committee.

Other committee members are Mrs. Earl Cannon, area chairman; Mrs. Raymond F. Giffels and Mrs. R. L. Bernhard, co-ordinators, and Mrs. Paul N. Penfield, nurses' aid.

Need a Lift to School? You Need State OK too

Birmingham's assistant school superintendent in charge of transportation has been out this week measuring distances from the Wylie E. Groves high school almost literally with a yardstick as the annual complaints about distance limits and bus rides filed in.

rides filed in.

The complaints came to Norman A. Wolfe—a petition signed by 49 Beverly Hills families who felt their children were being passed up unfairly by school buses.

A RECHECK and some pinpoint measuring brought 13 of the families with—rather, outside—the limits set for walkers and riders.

The others were told that they would have to find their own way around muddy roads and straight walks to school.

The state and its budget took its usual share of the blame, as Wolfe told a capacity crowd of parents at Tuesday night's board of education meeting of state-imposed limitations and reimbursements.

THE STATE, he said, set the one-and-one-half-mile limit within which all children must walk.

"It goes from the driveway of the student's home to the driveway of the school," he explained.

The school district must account for every busload of children, and loses some state money for every student riding the bus "illegally" said Dr. Dwight B. Ireland, superintendent of schools.

STATE transportation kickbacks, he said, "now come out of state aid funds, cutting us further back. The $205 we get per student for educational purposes is more like $150 or $160," he said.

The district, he went on, is paying for every elementary school student who lives within the legal limit and rides the bus.

The question of rides for students within the city limits was practically insoluble, Ireland pointed out.

THE STATE'S bill for transportation is $12 million to $14 million per year now," he said. "To pay for rides within city limits would cost the state $7 million more for Detroit alone."

"What about mud roads without sidewalks?" asked one mother?" or those starlight walks to school on winter mornings asked another?

"The state doesn't take these things into consideration," Wolfe answered.

"THE LOCAL municipal authority is the agency to contact for sidewalks," Ireland said. The board of education is happy to get together with parents and governments on this and similar questions," Ireland said.

"I don't like to get out with a tape measure and then have to tell a student on one side of a street that he can ride and one on the other side that he must walk," Wolfe said. But he had little choice, he said.

I have the distances figured to within one lot," he said.

ABOUT THE only solution for those who wanted rides but did not qualify was to get a group of about 60 children and arrange to have them moved by Great Lakes transportation company bus.

The explanation and solution seemed to pacify the solicitous parents; class was dismissed, and they left noisily.
