Here's a Tourist's Guide To Copper Country Wonders

Michigan is a land of infinite diversity, but even the most experienced Michigan traveler is taken aback by his first contact with the striking features of the upper peninsula's copper country.

The three counties (Ontonagon, Houghton and Keweenaw) that make up the region contain more than 400 inland lakes and 2,400 miles of streams—as well as the surrounding waters of Lake Superior. Deer, bear and other animals are abundant in the area's great forests.

Traveling into the copper country is easily similar to going backward in time. This sensation reaches its height with the sudden appearance of the Porcupine Mountains state park in the northern edge of the region.

THE TALLEST of these mountains rises some 2,000 feet and seems strangely foreign in the rolling landscape now typical of midwestern states. The rocks that form the base of the mountains are among the oldest in the world, with a geological age of more than one billion years.

Although the copper country can be reached from either east or west, the more scenic route takes the traveler into the copper peninsula via the mammoth Mackinac bridge, then west across the U.P. from St. Ignace on US-2 or M-28.

In the western end of the peninsula, M-64 winds north to the Porcupine Mountains.

White Pine, a resurrected copper mining town built in 1952 on the ruins of an earlier silver mining town, is now the largest in the settlement. The copper deposit now being worked is the largest in the world.

Farther north is Porcupine Mountains state park, a 58,000-acre expanse of primitive forests and secluded lakes.

HIGHWAY M-64 continues on past deserted mine sites to historic Ontonagon, where French missionaries were the first white men to see and report the existence of a 5,000-pound boulder of pure native copper. This huge Ontonagon "nugget" is now displayed in the Smithsonian Institute at Washington, D.C.

South of the village of Ontonagon is the ghost town of Victoria, a relic of the copper boom now being claimed by the surrounding forest. But the aura of bonanza days clings like early morning mist to the crumbling buildings.

Also nearby is the Michigan mine, where the largest single mass of copper ever mined was reported. The 547-ton chunk required the labors of 45 men for 15 months before it could be wrested from the earth.

Highway M-26 runs northward into the heartland of the copper country to the presently active region around Houghton, Hancock tal, guardhouse and barracks, furnished as they were in the days when the frontier outpost was active.

Nearby state park facilities include camping and picnic sites in forestland at the northernmost tip of Michigan.

The University of Michigan's Museum of Art acquired 184 paintings, drawings, sculpture and ceramics during the past year, many of them gifts.

THE GARDENER'S CORNER

The Answers to Your Gardening Questions by Bob

QUESTION OF THE WEEK:

Is there any good method for repairing a patchy lawn?

BOB'S ANSWER:

Try going over the whole area with a steel rake, scoring the ground thoroughly. Cover the area with a half inch of mixed compost or humus and fertilizer and water it heavily. Let it dry for a day then rake lightly and replant your lawn seed. Roll with a heavy roller.
