Anglers

during the early part of the year but later, after spawning or when hot weather arrives, they move to deeper waters. They favor deep holes in mid-summer, especially around the middle of the day. Weeded areas are among their favorite haunts.

BLUEGILLS are the most commonly-caught fish from Michigan inland waters, are abundant throughout the lower peninsula and in some lakes above the Straits. They are found in shallow waters or at moderate depths of weedy lakes. You may enjoy some good results if you try fishing for bluegills in shallow water just before sunset when they are feeding at the surface. A fly rod and artificial dry fly are customarily used for this but a simple cane pole and weighted fly can also be effective.

The sunfish prefers the same waters and baits as his finny relative, the bluegill.

Rock bass are plentiful in the lower peninsula, especially in the large and deeper lakes and southern non-rock rivers. They can also be found in some parts of the upper peninsula. This fish prefers live cover of underwater boulders, brush heaps, overhanging banks, log jams and docks. Rock bass are often caught in 20 to 40 feet of water in deeper lakes.

Based on numbers caught, perch rank as the most important sport fish in the northern half of the state, in both inland lakes and coastal waters of the Great Lakes. They are also No. 1 on the angler's catch list in some of the state's southern waters such as Lake St. Clair. Perch feed in the daytime near the bottom. Like crappies, they run in schools, so if you land one, chances are you've hit the jackpot.

Cleaning fish is a simple chore if it's done promptly with a heavy, sharp knife. Scales are scraped off from tail to head. Leave the head and tail on, if you prefer, or hark them off after scaling. In removing entrails, slit the underside from gills to vent. Then clean the inside of the body cavity by rubbing it with salt or simply washing it with cold water. Fins are easily removed by sliding the fish at the side, grasping the rear of the fin and pulling toward the head.

strategy as the "key play" to be perfected in training workouts. "We plan to work to improve our play execution on offense and our alertness on defense in this vital situation and I think it will pay off in victories for us during the season," he said.

"Time and again last year," said Wilson, "we had chances to keep drives moving if we could have hit a receiver or had a pass caught that was in a man's hands. On defense, we contained the opponents on the first two downs, but seemed to let down enough on the third to allow them to make the big play for the first down."

"This has to change in '60 if we hope to improve on our 3-8-1 record of last season," he said. "FROM THE START of training camp, Wilson and his staff have been bearing down with quarterbacks to "hit the spot" in the passing department. Timing and coordination between passers and receivers will be worked over until it becomes automatic, Wilson said. "There is no doubt about the third down play and the importance it plays in winning and losing football games, and we plan to have more of those key plays going our way in '60, he said.
