Business Students Stress Value of Good Appearance

How valuable is a good appearance to the young man crossing over from the school world to the business world?

This question was highlighted recently at the annual meeting of the nation's top high school and college business students.

Meeting in Chicago under the auspices of the Future Business Leaders of America, the students adopted a 10-point code of ethical business practice. Indicating the importance of good appearance, Point 8 of the student code declares: "I will dress and act in a manner that will bring respect to me and my employer."

THE FUTURE Business Leaders of America, whose 2,200 chapters and 84,000 student members throughout the country cooperate with local business men, has discovered that personal and classroom "courses" in proper business wear and good grooming pay handsome dividends to the present and future careers of the young American business man.

For the past two years, the FBLA has stressed the importance of appearance in the business world through a "dress right" student guidance program, carried out with the cooperation of the American Institute of Men's and Boys' Wear.

With the aid of educational materials such as film slides, charts showing proper color combinations, appropriate dress booklets and the like, students belonging to this organization have been studying the ABC's of proper business wear and good grooming along with confidence in my ability to perform my work at a high standard.

4. I will exercise initiative and responsibility and will cooperate with my employer and fellow workers.

5. I will seek to profit by my mistakes and take suggestions and criticisms directed toward the improvement of myself and my work.

6. I will, to the best of my ability, abide by the rules and regulations of my employer.

7. I will respect my employer and fellow workers and be considerate of them.

8. I will dress and act in a manner that will bring respect to me and my employer.

9. I will use my time to the best advantage of my employer.

10. I will seek to improve my community by contributing my efforts and resources to its worthwhile projects.

"But," continues Roy, "that doesn't mean you can afford to relax once you start working. Your employer, your fellow employees and the public first know the 90 per cent of you that is made up of your apparel. If that 90 per cent of you is sloppy and unattractive, they are not going to delve into your beautiful soul and mighty brain."

And dressing right is not only important for its effect on other people—it means a lot to you, giving you self-confidence and a sense of poise when meeting the public.

THE COMPLETE code of ethical business practices, to go into effect among the organized business students in the 1960-61 year, follows:

1. I will be honest and sincere in all my business dealings.

2. I will willingly accept responsibilities and duties assigned to me.

3. I will approach each task with confidence in my ability to perform my work at a high standard.

4. I will exercise initiative and responsibility and will cooperate with my employer and fellow workers.

5. I will seek to profit by my mistakes and take suggestions and criticisms directed toward the improvement of myself and my work.

6. I will, to the best of my ability, abide by the rules and regulations of my employer.

7. I will respect my employer and fellow workers and be considerate of them.

8. I will dress and act in a manner that will bring respect to me and my employer.

9. I will use my time to the best advantage of my employer.

10. I will seek to improve my community by contributing my efforts and resources to its worthwhile projects.

Kingswood School Slates Adult Classes

CRANBROOK—Beginning Oct. 4, Kingswood School Cranbrook will hold its fifth annual session of evening classes for adults.

Classes will meet each Tuesday throughout the fall, from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. Faculty members and the course offerings, designed to interest the adult community, will be announced later by Thomas E. Jones, director of night school.
