

59 Teachers' Resignations Are Accepted

At the end of the school year in June, 41 elementary school teachers in the Birmingham school system turned in their resignations. In the secondary schools, 18 resigned, effective June 17, 1960. Among the secondary school teachers who left the Birmingham system was Carl Zwinck, teacher of physics and chemistry at Seaborn high school. Zwinck had instituted a program of extra laboratory work outside of regular classroom hours for interested students.

BRUCE NOBLE, another teacher who came put in extra hours conducting a special program for students, also resigned in June. He had been physical education instructor at Adams and Harlan schools.

Noble inaugurated a popular after-school program of limbering-up exercises and square dancing for Harlan school children.

As of June, the school system had named 47 new teachers to either replace those who resigned or take over new classrooms.
