To Have a Friend, You Must First Be a Friend

To the Editor:

In reply to Mrs. Bill Jones' letter (in Nov. 23 Eccentric) regarding prejudice:

"Who can be my friends and who of them meet the requirements of being my friends?"

Every human being has the requirements and can be your friend, if you will find it in your heart to be a friend.

If we are to be persuaded or influenced by all the prejudice in this world, then we are not living a moral life. The most valuable asset we have is the understanding of our moral laws specifically and definitely outlined in our Commandments.

To BE HAPPY and content in this life, we should remember that two human beings think or act exactly the same; therefore, we must respect the rights and convictions of others. To dislike or criticize any person or group of people because they do not think as we, is to display a weakness of character and the lack of moral understanding.

Our moral laws teach us that we should not interfere with the happy pursuit of others.

From the beginning, man has offended these moral laws, but what a wonderful world this would be if each of us would keep these Commandments.

I SINCERELY hope this may cause your mind regarding who may be your friends. It is up to you. You are to be given a great amount of appreciation for possessing the courage to speak out—when many, many people roll with the tide of prejudiced opinions.
