

Long Dec. Nights Also Most Deadly On Our Highways

December nights are longest of the year, and the most deadly for motorists, Gerald W. Shipman, executive secretary of the State Safety Commission, declared.

"Shorter days and longer nights are menacing only to the drivers who fail to adjust their driving speeds to account for the extra hazards involved," Shipman stated.

"December traffic accidents in the United States last year claimed 3,850 lives, or a daily average of 131, making the last month of 1939 the worst month of the entire year, according to National Safety Council figures," the Secretary observed.

"In our own state last year, traffic accidents during the month of December claimed 159 lives," he added.

"It's the moral responsibility of all drivers to strive to prevent accidents. Our slogan this December is 'Drive By The Golden Rule—You Are Your Brother's Keeper.'"

Presbyterians Plan Cantata, Tableau
