May Tighten B-1 Parking Requirements

About the only change in Birmingham's zoning ordinance will be to see if off-street parking requirements can be made greater in B-1 (non-retail) business zones.

A majority of city commissioners and plan board members last week also discarded three other suggestions as non-workable.

AT THEIR quarterly joint meeting, it was agreed: The city attorney should draw up an amendment to eliminate accessory business uses from the R-7 multiple zone. (It is a carry-over from the old ordinance, and no one could recall why this provision was included in the revised ordinance.)

The R-7 zone will not be amended to permit certain professional uses. (No one could see how this could be permitted as a transitional use without being more of a threat than an aid to residential zones.)

CITY ATTORNEY Dean G. Beyer said he can see no legal defense for a "strictly professional office zoning classification." Commissioners accepted City Planner Herbert Herzberg's recommendation to up-date the city's proposed business alley development program.

Fourteen of the old program's 35 alleys have been developed, he reported. He said a new priority list is needed.

At the meeting were Mayor Harry M. Dwyer, Jr., and City Commissioners Florence Willett, Charles Renfrew and Carl Ingraham, and Plan Board Members Robert Fage (chairman), Victor Peck and Walter Denton.

More room inside... without raising the roof or stretching the car

Wide doors you can step through rather than squirm through.

Come see for yourself. Stretch out in the 1960 Chrysler Corporation cars at the Detroit Auto Show.

The new Unibody Construction of 1960 Chrysler Corporation cars has smartly solved two big problems: How to get more room inside without making cars larger outside. And how to make it easier for you to get in and out.

This new way to build cars let us lower the floor, widen the doors, and get rid of useless bulk. So these new cars are no higher, no longer than last year's, but are far more comfortable to live with.

Unibody surrounds you with silent strength.

Unibody means body and frame are a single unit, instead of separate parts connected by nuts and bolts.

The biggest single difference between Unibody and old "unitized" construction is this: Road noise and shock are no longer telegraphed to where you sit. Cars with Unibody Construction are so quiet you'll think you're going ten miles an hour slower than you actually are.

Electronic engineering (used by Chrysler Corporation to build America's most successful minivans) helped make this possible. Giant electronic computers not only helped design stronger and quieter cars, they even helped "road test" these 1960 cars—before they were ever built.

RESULT: The best-put-together cars in our history.
