B'ham Community House Slates New Activities

"The Birmingham Community House confidently expects to be in operation for a long time to come and will have the strongest program in its history during 1960-61."

"Despite the fact that we are still some 10 thousands dollars short of our $51,500 goal for 1960-61 operating funds, the board feels that the House is needed more at this time and in the years ahead than it has ever been. With the entire area growing at the present rate—a population increase of 480 percent in the last 10 years—the community will require every available resource.

THE BCH has been the focal point for this area's social, educational, cultural and philanthropic activities during the past 37 years, and we fully intend to continue meeting the needs of the people in this area—even more effectively than in the past.

Barney explained that the Community House may have to bypass its long-range planning and depreciation fund and temporarily reduce its maintenance and repair program since the Fund Drive goal has not been met.

"IN THE MONTHS ahead," he said, "we intend to make the people of Birmingham, Bloomfield Hills and other area communities aware of what the BCH does and can do for them—and how much it means simply to have the House available in the area where they live.

"We feel certain that as more people come to realize the many values and assets of the House, the less they will take it for granted and the more eager they'll be to support it and to assure its future service to the community.

CONTINUING his comment on the future of the BCH, Barney said: "Not only will many organiza-

Teacher is Taught

George A. Cooch, a French instructor at E. W. Seaholm High School, is instructed by Associate Professor Laszlo Borbas in the use of teaching devices in one of Michigan State University's language laboratories, where students practice speaking a foreign language and compare their facility with recordings made on master tapes.

Cooch is one of 58 teachers selected to participate in the National Defense Foreign Language Institute being held this summer at Michigan State University. Selections were made from approximately 1,200 inquiries into the program.

ings, he added, in terms of efficiency through the use of casing communications between county offices and utilizing modern, adequately designed buildings instead of old, decrepit buildings converted to a use for which they were never intended.

Additional savings, Levinson said, will come through: 1) Building new "pay-as-you-go" plants that will eliminate the high interest costs involved in floating bonds.

2) BUILDING THE COMPLETE center at one time which is cheaper than constructing buildings one at a time and provides further savings by allowing all the administrative departments to be moved from their present locations at one time.

3) Building now when construction costs are almost certainly lower than they will be in coming years.

Oakland county's population has soared from 396,000 in 1950 to close to 700,000.

"The growing needs of our expanding population will have to be met," Levinson declared, "and failure to recognize this now and keep up with these demands will be tremendously costly in the future both in dollars and in the welfare and comfort of our residents."

WHAT IS IT GOING TO COST the taxpayer? Lumping together millage rates, equalization factors and the present valuation, Levinson said the cost on an "average" home assessed at $5,000 would be $2.50 per year or 50 cents for each $1,000 of assessed valuation for four years.

"However," he added, "any increase in our total valuation and any funds realized through the sale of our downtown property will be credited to the building fund and the millage reduced accordingly."

"We are sure $4 million will do the job. If we get $4 million with the lower tax rate the proposed half-mill, we'll do it."

WHILE ON THE SUBJECT of finances, Levinson pointed out that Oakland county probably is unique in this area in that it has no debts—no outstanding bond issues.

"We always have tried to operate on a 'pay-as-you-go' basis and this project is a continuation of that policy," he said.

To what does he attribute Oakland county's solid financial position? "Frugal operation... foresightfulness... money brought in through the sale surplus lands," Levinson replied.

He pointed out that the $3 million to cover new construction to house the county courts and their associated offices is being paid for out of existing funds without a tax increase or bond issue.

"If this proposition fails," Levinson said, "we're going to have to go out and rent more office space. This will mean less efficient operation and service at higher cost."

"What," Levinson was asked, "are the disadvantages as you see them to the millage proposal as it is being presented to the voters?"

Levinson paused, pondering the question carefully. "Finally," he said "I'd really like to think of someone who'd want to look as though I'm trying to make a one-way street of this. It's hard to think of disadvantages."

"The only disadvantage I can think of is that we are going to have to be very careful for the next 15 years to hold down our personnel to the number that are actually needed."

"There always is a tendency, when you have space available, to keep on adding employees. This is expensive—and unless they are actually needed, it's a waste."

Diver

cautions and equipment are needed. "These are all things that an experienced diver would have avoided," Kratt said.

Scott's 17-year-old companion, Douglas Neumann, who nearly drowned also, could shed little light on what happened to his friend.

"The last I saw him, he seemed to be swimming along all right," said old Bloomfield Hills Police Chief Norman Denkhe.

NEUMANN SAID that he, too, was all right when he first waded into the lake with Scott, but when he started swimming, he realized almost immediately that he was overweighted and couldn't go on (he was wearing a 20 lb. weight belt).

He kicked free of his equipment and struggled back to the dock where they had started, collapsing from exhaustion as soon as he was out of the water.

He was met at the dock by James Penobly, owner of Peabody's Market, 154 S. Hunter, Birmingham, who lives a short way around the lake from where the youths entered the water.

Penobly said that he was diving on the raft around 9:30 a.m. when his wife heard someone shouting, "Help me... help me!" he called out in a panic.

NOTING THE HEADLIGHTS of a car which the boys had directed toward the lake, he drove around to the spot to see what was happening.

"I went to help him... he told me to never mind about him... there was another boy out there I rushed over to Jim Todd's house (a friend who lives nearby) and the other authorities."

"We went back to the lake... Neumann asked me to help him... I asked if he wanted me to help him out of his suit but he said it was too hard to get off... by that time the fire and police department had arrived.

"THEY STARTED TO WORK on Neumann... I went out with Todd in his boat to see if we could find the other boy... we never heard or saw any trace of him."

Penobly flatly denied the story told by three Berkeley youths that he called Neumann out of the water.

Bloomfield Township police officers' deputies and state police dragged the lake and skindivers probed the weedy depths all through the night and until Scott's body was recovered at approximately 7 p.m. Monday night.

Chief Norman Denkhe arrived on the scene Sunday morning shortly after the incident was reported and remained in direct operations until 3 p.m. the following afternoon.

SCOTT'S BODY was found in a mass of weeds 125 yds. from shore and 15 yds. south of the raft he and Neumann had been swimming toward. The water was 8 to 10 ft deep.

He was first found by an unidentified Air Force volunteer skindiver who lost sight of the body when he surfaced to ask for help. The body finally was recovered by another volunteer, Paul Valentini, 27, of Putnam street, Pontiac.

Scott, a student at Bloomfield Hills high school, was the son of George D. Scott, 561 Rudgate, Bloomfield Hills, a vice-president of E.S. Call Co., 2000 N. York.

Neumann is the son of Earl Neumann, 4805 Colby Lane, Bloomfield Township, and a student at Culver Military Academy.

NEUMANN HAD NEVER been skindiving before and his only instruction in the sport was a few pointers from Scott while they were driving to pick up the gear with a third youth, William McCombs, 213 1/2 Quenton road.

McCombs said he had gone with Neumann and Scott to the swimming equipment store on Woodward avenue in Birmingham about 9:30 p.m. Sunday to rent the rubber suits, air tanks and other equipment.

They went to the dock near Gilbert Lake road, McCombs said, where he helped the two boys don their equipment. When they entered the water about 10 p.m., McCombs went home.

McCombs told police that he and Scott, who had been taught the fundamentals by a friend with four years experience, had practiced skindiving Sunday afternoon in the Neumann's swimming pool.

FUNERAL SERVICES for Scott were held Wednesday at Christ Church, Cranbrook, and burial was in Woodlawn cemetery. Arrangements were by the Bell Chapel of the William R. Hamilton Co.

Scott is survived by his parents; his half-brother, George; a younger brother, James; a sister, Mrs. Helen Hamilton, and by his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Scott and Mr. and Mrs. Lyman Hurd.
