A Prize of Craftsmanship

Columnist Returns To Walloon Lake

WALLOON LAKE—To many of us the North Woods is an enchanted kingdom. As such, it has no definite boundaries. To these sensibilities it begins somewhere between Standish and West Branch, where the hardwoods gradually give way to the evergreens, where deer paths, woods roads and firelogs cross and re-cross the forest. It is the home of the dusky harlequin, the lusty fire-waxer, the wild snardragon and the Indian prairiechick and as some of the forest paths one may come upon the sudden beauty of a blazing hot on the pine and sweet fern, three hangs over all an unforgettable fragrance, pungent and sweet.

In the vicinity of Gaylord, we gradually passed the pine country to enter one of the most mature beech-maple forest areas in our lower peninsula. We wait for the moment when we reach the familiar lane. We had forgotten how tall are the old trees, how deep the forest stillness.

AS WE WALK the soft-foot path it is always a revelation to see how much of man's aggression is obliterated by a single season's growing. Leaves, bark and dead limbs obscure the way. Growing seedlings of beech and maple cover wheels and parking lot.

Now we exchange more familiar urban sounds for the ringing song of the veery through the plaintive call of the wood pewee and the noisy hammering of the pileated woodpecker. We Mrs. Frehsig

Quiz 1,000 Area Drivers

Nearly 1,000 drivers, most of them from the Detroit area, are being called this week to appear before Detroit area driver license improvement examiners of the Michigan Department of State to face possible suspension or revocation of their driver licenses.

These drivers have built up records of traffic law violations during the past two years, which total at least 12 points.

Under Michigan's Point System, drivers may have their licenses suspended or revoked, or receive other restrictive action, when they have amassed 12 points over a two-year period.

EXAMINERS WILL interview the violators to determine whether their licenses should be taken away if they should be given another chance to improve their driver practices, according to the Department of State.

"We are stepping up our activities in this program because we feel that this is a powerful weapon to prevent future accidents," Secretary of State James M. Hare said.

"We expect to call in this year between 55 and 60 thousand drivers. Nearly half of them will lose their licenses, if past percentages hold true."

The recent study of the records of 100,000 drivers in California showed a definite relationship between violations and accidents. The accident records of drivers who had no convictions during a three-year period were compared with those who had one conviction, two convictions, three convictions and so on.
