200 Graduates March for Licenses

Two hundred would-be teenage drivers, graduates of the Seaholm driver education classes, will be marching into the police station the next few weeks in quest of their driver's licenses. Center available for use for public performances put on by local groups. The foundation also plans to sponsor an annual concert series and other performances.

Present plans also call for the construction of an art gallery. This gallery would be used for shows from other areas, as well as by local artists. It is hoped the gallery eventually would contain a permanent display.

AN ART TRAINING center is contemplated. It would house workshop groups taking training in fine basic arts. Estimates indicate that costs of the theatre would be several million dollars, exclusive of land acquisition costs. The completed Center will be a multi-million dollar project.

The corporation would secure all financing from private sources. Funds for construction would be secured from membership fees as well as private solicitation.

It is hoped additional funds can be raised for endowment purposes. The endowment fund would be used to support education in the workshop groups.

FEES FOR THIS education could then be kept at a minimum, thereby encouraging art training for children and interested adults. Also, the endowment would be used to make up any deficit in the Center's operating expenses.

The corporation has under consideration several concepts of the buildings to be included in the Center. These studies will include consideration of proposals advanced by interested groups, as well as similar projects in other communities.

CONSIDERATION is now being given to the selection of a suitable site for the Center. Boards plans call for a study of southern Oakland County to select a location convenient for the numerous communities in the area. This study would consider present population shifts in the county.

A temporary office for the corporation has been donated by Chy Yankee, Inc., at 378 E. Maple, Birmingham.

Aikens stated that preliminary conversations with interested individuals had indicated a serious need for this kind of facility.

Furthermore, he stated that the Center would provide entertainment and educational opportunities not now available to surrounding communities.

Politics Lacks Dramatic Life, Says U-M Prof

ANN ARBOR — Politics needs more drama to stimulate public interest, declares Carl E. Lindstrom of University of Michigan professor of journalism.

Professor Lindstrom, former executive editor of the Hartford (Conn.) Times says: "The torchlight parade, the slogans of "Tippecanoe and Tyler too," and the "Romanism and Rebellion" may have had their political intemperance, cheapness, emotionalism, but they had drama.

"Is there nothing dramatic today in man's relationship to the rule of his community, state and nation? Must all be conformity and pattern?"

NEWSPAPERS AND politics coverage are, in part, responsible for decay of the word "politics," for the lack of interest on the part of the public in the affairs of government and for a decline in the caliber of men elected to public office, Lindstrom maintains.

"But all the blame cannot rest with the press," he adds. "The gradual fading of traditional issues which separate the major political parties has had its effect. No heat can be generated today over the tariff, centralization of government, foreign relations, or other issues not because these issues are no longer important but because the two dominant parties no longer differ in their approach to solutions, except to uphold each other."

LINDSTROM CITES failures which can be ascribed to the press alone:

"The politician will make a statement at the top of a handout, especially his own but. Even if he says nothing, the reporters will somehow contrive to write a column straining to make it appear that he did say something, or the fact that he said nothing must be very significant indeed.

"Issues are not nailed together in the planks of a party platform; issues are created by an alert press which lines up for a stake a stand even on an unpopular cause. This is increasingly difficult to do for a press that is a one-party press, but the problem is the same for the Democratic side, but the party of conservatism and reaction because newspapering is a big business.

"NEWSPAPERS HAVE actively cultivated every factor that tends to dilute public interest in public affairs," including the "inaccuracy" headline. Lord Bryce is that the instinct to ride the band wagon is almost a ruling passion with the American public and hence it (the poll) corrupts the democratic principle of the ballot."

Reporters "in the hope of divining sentiment accompany candidates to find them stumble repetitously the platitudes that they long have lived with and with which they have wearied the ears of voters."
