

It is foolish to deceive yourself into believing yourself perfect... unless you really are. Most of us make mistakes, now and then we reveal our vanities, frequently we boast our way away from humility; perhaps we are covetous, envious, maybe too often we are critical, wrongfully, of others. If we are so, and are aware of such shortcomings, we can improve. Our worst error may be to deceive ourselves.

'Art for All' Highlights BAA Spring Classes

Two young puppet fanciers perform for their instructor, Melvin "Doc" Whittle. Gina Lopata and Guy Billings are students at the Young People's Studio Theatre which offers dramatics, puppetry, conversational French and designing for youngsters. Set-building, lighting and sound are also included in the program. Imagination and creativity developed by the study of dramatics is the purpose of the workshop. It is open to all young people.

Discovering the joy of movement under the direction of Claire Levine are students of the creative dance class. They are Betsy Quinn, Gay Mirbach, Christine Laitlaw, Kit Stark, Sara Conrad and Candy Clark. The classes are held at the Birmingham YMCA, 400 E. Lincoln; instruction begins at 3:45 p.m. March 14 for teenage girls and continues each Thursday. All other classes are held at the Bloomfield Art association, 361 N. Woodward.

Clifford West discusses a sketch with one of his life drawing students. Both beginning and advanced students are given individual instruction in charcoal drawing of a model.

Albert Mullen (left) tutors men only in his studio art class. Mullen watches while Paul Smith paints. Mullen emphasizes the development of concept and skill in drawing and painting. Materials for the class include pen, pencil, charcoal, watercolor, tempera and oil.

Svea Kline examines a piece of sculpture created by her student. She instructs in various sculptural media including clay, plaster, wood and stone. The class is open to both beginning and advanced students.
