WHAT DOCTORS SAY ABOUT:

Better Health Through Knowledge

Armchair for Bad Heart

- Lemon Juice
- Gold Injections

Q. A member of my family recently had a heart attack. Much to everyone's surprise the doctor allowed the patient to sit in a chair the very next day. I have always heard that a heart victim needs complete rest. Am I right or wrong?

A. You are partly right but a little bit behind the times. Recently there has been considerable interest in the armchair treatment of patients who have certain types of heart attacks. Some of the top heart specialists let some patients sit in a chair at intervals beginning the first day or so after the attack. Certain patients allowed this privilege seem to get along better than those kept flat on their backs. Doctors have found that, generally speaking, the heart works harder when we are lying down than when we sit up. This does not mean that all heart patients should jump out of bed. It is for the doctor to decide which treatment method is best.

Q. Is it harmful to drink the juice of a lemon daily?

A. Yes, according to some medical investigators. It is reported that steady use of lemon juice has a tendency to cause tooth damage. An adequate amount of vitamin C can be had without resorting to the daily use of lemon juice.

Q. Please discuss gold injections for arthritis. Is such treatment expensive?—Mrs. M.

A. In general, the conservative treatment of arthritis includes rest, drugs, and physical measures prescribed by the physician. If these fail the doctor may try gold injections. Treatment for several months is often required before results are obtained. There is no sure cure for arthritis and gold therapy is no exception. Medical costs should be discussed with your doctor.
