Later Mr. George J. Greenwald, principal, answered the myriad questions mothers asked. He maneuvered around with the movie machine to show colored slides. He flashed deftly back and forth turning lights off and on.

"You see," said breathless Mr. Greenwald to Mr. Richard Coolman, who succeeds him next year, "being a principal means being able to do everything."

"When the meeting's over I'll get the broom," he promised. Mr. Coolman, catching on fast to this primary principal of principal-principal.

Next fall Mr. Greenwald will be off to Harvard to study for his doctorate. His administration career program scholarship was won through examinations and personal interviews in competition with aspirants from all over the country.
