5 FOOD CHAIN STOCKS

Our April Monthly Letter studies the investment potential of the nation's food chains. Continued growth of food chains is indicated by a steadily rising population and an upgrading of food purchases by housewives. Food chains should increase their share of growing sales through further inroads into volume of the specialty food store and the unaffiliated, independent food store. Another avenue of growth, is non-food products particularly soft goods, and health and beauty aids. In our judgment, food chain stocks offer stability of income, above-average defensive characteristics and growth potential. Our new Monthly Letter states that a number of food chain stocks are attractive for long-term investment and analyzes 5 issues in this group.
