24 State Road Dept. Employees Complete Course

LANSING—Twenty-four State Highway Dept. employees have completed training to become the first line of defense in the event of an atomic attack on the U.S.

The employees—representing all parts of the state—look part in a two-day radiological monitoring school conducted in Lansing by the highway department and the Michigan Office of Civil Defense.

State Highway Commissioner John C. Mackie said the department's responsibility under the State Survival Plan is engineering and rescue.

In the event of wartime use of radioactive weapons, the highway department radiological teams would serve as advance parties to determine what areas are safe for reconstruction work," Mackie said.

They will also determine what highways are safe for travel.

"THE RADIOLOGICAL teams also have peacetime responsibilities in the event a truck hauling radioactive material would be involved in an accident," Mackie said.

"In such a case, the highway would have to be monitored to determine the amount, if any, radiation."

The department has the latest radiological monitoring equipment available for use by employees who took the course he said.

Monitors will soon be assigned to each of the department's 10 district offices, which are located at Detroit, Pontiac, Jackson, Kalamazoo, Grand Rapids, Saginaw, Alpena, Cadillac, Newberry and Crystal Falls.
