Where, Oh Where Did Warbler Go?

The vanishing Kirtland's Warbler is the species of bird which nests in Michigan and nowhere else in the world, says Harrison B. Tordoff (PhD), University of Michigan associate professor of zoology and curator of birds.

The bird winters in the Bahamas and covers the distance between there and its breeding grounds in Michigan so rapidly that it is seldom seen in migration.

Its breeding range in Michigan is an area about 100 miles long and 60 miles wide located in the north central part of the Lower Peninsula. The towns of Grayling, Mio and Atlanta are in this area, Tordoff says.

THE KIRTLAND'S Warbler is fairly large for a warbler, bluish gray on the back, with yellow breast and dark side streaks. Its song is loud, clear and frequent.

During the nesting season the Kirtlands Warbler's habitat is restricted to groves of young jack pines which must be between five and 15 feet. The nest is placed on the ground under the jack pines which grow in areas cleared by forest fires.

With the increasing control of forest fires the suitable nesting habitat has decreased so that the birds are much less numerous now than 50 years ago.

"THERE IS ALSO reason to think Kirtland's Warblers are declining because of nest -grabbing cowbirds," says Tordoff. "This probably been the most important factor in the reduction of the population of this warbler since the turn of the century. The cowbird usually removes one warbler egg from the nest and deposits its own.

"The future of this bird is not bright," says Tordoff. "In the summer of 1951 all singing males were counted. The count showed there were fewer than 500 pairs, a very small population indeed for any species."

Michigan's huge salt basin, located beneath 27 counties in the lower peninsula, is one of the largest salt basins anywhere in the world.

Michigan ranks first in number of telephones per capita of the Great Lakes states.
