

Another Patsy For Patterson

By LOU CHIESI
 Tom McNely, a few years back was a vigorous young tackle prospect at Michigan State University. Coach Duffy Daugherty had recruited well among the high schools of Massachusetts, his ally Irish with all the banquet table travelling in a succession of Irish lads revealed a zest to don the appropriate Green and White of the Spartans.

To name a few—Bill Quinlan, a hard-nosed defensive end and who now performs for the Green Bay Packers after a brawny career with the Montreal Alouettes of the Canadian Big Four and the Cleveland Browns of the National Football League; Pat Burke, a curly-haired red head who aspires to a political career; and Roger Donohue, a belting halfback who some how became lost in the shuffle after a fine sophomore year.

McNely's career at Michigan State ended suddenly one afternoon during a stroll with a girl friend through the university Union building. A few strays loitering in the lobby apparently whispered a remark or two about McNely's companion.

McNely overheard and thought were derogatory descriptions. A few minutes later the lobby was strewn with the wreckage of the McNely indignation.

UNIVERSITY authorities failed to appreciate an Irishman practicing his temper on another Irishman they were a little apprehensive about such things because Mr. Quinlan had not long before had wiped out the larger part of a fraternity house in defense of some friends.

On previous occasions Quinlan had made a wisecrack about Quinlan's buddies; so Bill was forced into an act of vengeance. McNely's championship bout would be the messiest by far.

Such a crime would far outdo the law breaking of Sonny Liston, obviously Patterson's foremost challenger in Class A at Cleveland. Patterson a convenient, and probably welcome, excuse for not giving the St. Louis puncher a chance at the crown.

McNely now becomes the fodder. Boston should be ripe for the kill. The Irish of South Boston probably will pay honest money for the fight.

THE PATTERSON-D'AMATO road show requires new cities. Seattle for the Rademacher fight, New York and then Miami for the Johnson paychecks.

It's somewhat like the oldtime medicine show sneaking out the town with the gate receipts before the citizens realize they've been bilked.

All of which leads up to the recent story that Floyd Patterson plans to risk his heavyweight title next fall against none other than Tom McNely of Boston. It's the same fugitive from Michigan State.

THE SELECTION of McNely follows the usual Patterson pattern of digging up paties. There was Pete Rademacher, the slow-moving amateur Tom Hoy Harris, the Cut'n-Shoot lightweight, and slow-witted Hurricane Jackson, who never should have been allowed in a ring.

Even manager Johnson was selected as fodder. Johnson surprised by belting out Patterson the first time around, abridging the boxing of Patterson's supposed greatness.

man with a punch and very little else. Yet he's an almost even bet to spot Patterson anytime they meet. With McNely's record, Johnson probably could splat Patterson for keeps.

Patterson, in his little-boy words, has proclaimed that he will be a fighting champion. Supposedly he is the manager of his own record, and will defend his own ring.

IT'S DOUBTFUL whether McNely can whip Quinlan. Not so Quinlan should dry out about 20 pounds or so. Quinlan, in condition, would be no less than 8-5 over McNely in East Lansing, where the respective fight marts of the two are properly assessed.

Even One-Round Burke might frighten McNely if he could get in the first punch.

But the buildup of McNely continues, somebody even placed an item in Dorothy Kilgallen's Broadway column about McNely's supposedly tattered promise. She should know better.

If McNely wishes Patterson the good of the sport, he should be boxing under the guise of cleaning up the sport.

Such a crime would far outdo the law breaking of Sonny Liston, obviously Patterson's foremost challenger in Class A at Cleveland.
