

MEA Planning Home For Retired Teachers

The Michigan Education Home Association, a corporation chartered by the Michigan Education Association, is making initial plans to provide housing for retired Michigan teachers. Dr. E. Dale Kennedy, MEA executive secretary, announced.

Named "Meha Village," the project is designed to establish housing facilities for retired personnel of Michigan public schools and colleges.

INITIALLY, ABOUT 500 persons will be accommodated by the village which is scheduled to be completed in the fall of 1965. "Meha Village" will provide residents with recreational, civic, cultural and educational opportunities, along with such physical benefits as complete medical care which will be available through the University of Michigan Hospital and Medical School.

It is expected that eventually, "Meha Village" will be able to accommodate about 1500 residents on a site near Ann Arbor.

THE RETIREMENT village is a fairly new concept in providing housing for older people in that it provides more independence for the resident than does the institutional type of retirement facility.

"Meha Village" is the outgrowth of the "Bay City Dream," a proposed home for retired teachers. The overwhelming approval of this project by active and retired Michigan educators resulted in the establishment of the Michigan Education Home Association.

The board of governors of MEHA, a non-profit, private, independent corporation, stands a plan for financing facilities for retired educators and set up "Meha Village" as the best means of providing attractive, economical, spacious, and well-equipped housing for older teachers.

THE PROPOSED plan is that both the active and retired personnel of Michigan public schools and colleges will be given the opportunity to participate in the following contractual arrangements.

A refugee couple from a Baltic country after a couple years of hard study were finally made citizens.

"Sophia! Sophia!" the husband cried ecstatically. "At last we are American citizens."

"Wonderful," Sophia replied. "Now you can do the dishes."

New System Being Devised To Detect Hurricanes Sooner

A new system to provide early detection of hurricanes may soon be available as a result of a seven-year research project of the oil industry.

Tested against known information on 41 past tropical disturbances, a list of 20 hurricane "criteria" correctly classified 40 of the 41 cases as developing hurricanes or merely storms. The system now awaits final testing.

With billions of dollars invested in offshore drilling rigs, as well as onshore petroleum installations in the hurricane belt, and with thousands of employees in the danger areas, the petroleum industry has a high stake in efforts to reduce hurricane damage.

panies only about $725 million in 19 years.

Thus, in 1954, the American Petroleum Institute organized its advisory committee on fundamental research on weather forecasting. The committee formed a hurricane panel and commissioned a leading meteorologist, Dr. Herbert Riehl, to prepare a "working handbook" on hurricanes.

Dr. Riehl, program director for atmospheric sciences at Colorado State University, developed the highly technical list of 20 hurricane "criteria"—conditions necessary to classify a brewing storm as a potential hurricane.

study using Dr. Riehl's prediction techniques is now being considered. Information on developing storms would be programmed into a special computer and its resulting forecasts compared against the actual events.

Recent research on many fronts has done much to aid hurricane forecasting and provide advance warnings. However, it does not yet provide a sure-fire method of predicting exactly under what circumstances a tropical storm will develop into a hurricane.

The American Petroleum Institute program, and Dr. Riehl's specific project, may take much of the guesswork out of hurricane detection.

Non-Slip Steps

To take the "slip" out of attic or basement steps, cover the wood on treads with Masonite 1/4" Tempered Presswood, applied with the screen or skid-proofing side exposed. Lightly bevel the exposed edges. Other places for applying this safety feature in the home are on the steps to a child's slide, steps of stpladder, or floor platform in the home workshop.

Art on 'Masonite'

Amateur artists are following the lead of the professionals in using Masonite Tempered Presswood instead of canvas for paintings. After being primed, the hardboard is ready for use, and either side may be used. One is smooth and the other, which has a screen-like texture, gives the appearance of canvas. Paintings on this material will endure indefinitely.
