People in Birmingham Progressively Taller

Birmingham's population—men, women and children—is getting taller all the time. Locally, each succeeding generation is becoming taller than the one that preceded it. Today, men who are six feet tall and women who are five feet seven inches are commonplace, compared with 20 years ago, when only 10 per cent grew to those heights.

THE RECORDS show that way back in the year 1910, when the local population amounted to 1,697, the average man was five foot seven inches and the average woman, five foot two inches.

A big change has taken place since then. According to studies made by insurance company actuaries, by the Department of Agriculture and by others on a national basis, today's young man is some two inches taller than his grandfather was and about one inch taller than his father was at a similar age.

The women, too, have made headway. They have added nearly 1 1/2" in height since grandma's day. Their average now, at age 20, is just over 5'4".

THE CURRENT population of Birmingham, which is 1,488 per cent more than it was 50 years ago, is also some three per cent taller than then, on the basis of the national findings.

If both kinds of growth were to be taken into account the increase in number and the increase in size—the local population would appear in a new light. It would loom larger than the mere totals in the last census indicate.

ACCORDING TO THE data, if everyone in the city were to set lengthwise along a straight line, head to foot, they would cover a distance of 26.5 miles, compared with the 1.5 miles that would have been spanned by the 1910 population.

Although it may never be done, if the present-day population of Birmingham were to be made over and cut down to 1910 size, there would be enough left over to assemble some 824 additional men and women.

TODAY'S KING-SIZE generation has been giving industry many headaches. Beds and mattresses must be longer, chairs must be deeper and wider, shoes larger and clothing roomier, to mention a few. What has caused all this growth? The authorities say the progress that has been made in medicine, sanitation and nutrition are responsible.

MEA Reports On Teacher Salary Range

LANSING — Bachelor's degree graduates of Michigan colleges and universities received an average beginning teacher salary in September, 1961, which ranged from $4,400 to $5,000 annually, the research division of the Michigan Education Association reported.

Surveyed by the MEA were 19 teacher education institutions in Michigan. The difference between the highest and the lowest salaries paid to beginning teachers in 1961 ranged from a low of $3,100 to a high of $6,650.

This is due to the fact that a number of high salaries which teachers accepted were in out-of-territorial United States (Africa and Alaska), while the lowest salaries paid were in out-of-state or parochial institutions.

Within Michigan, the highest beginning salary reported ranged from $4,800 to $5,200; the lowest ranged from $3,800 to $4,500.

MSUO Exhibits Artist's Work

A large group of color lithographs by Station Crawford, a distinguished American painter and printmaker, will be exhibited at the Oakland Center, Michigan State University, Oakland, between Oct. 19 and Nov. 12.

Crawford's work was included in the recent "Precisionist" exhibit organized by the Walker Art Center in Minneapolis and shown this spring at the Detroit Institute of Arts.

The MSUO showing is a new collection assembled by Professor Richard B. Freeman, of the University of Kentucky, whose book on Crawford's lithographs will be published this December.

THE WORKS TO be shown at MSUO include Crawford's widely known "Overseas Highway" of 1940 as well as a number of pictures inspired by the devastated landscape at Cologne, Germany.

According to Dr. John Galloway, MSUO professor of art, Crawford's art is unique in that it suggests both the tensions and the optimism of contemporary American life.

Born in Canada, Crawford has resided and worked mainly in Spain, France, India and many areas of the United States. The public is invited to visit the MSUO exhibit which is sponsored by the MSUO art department in cooperation with the University's committee on cultural programs.
