been fully informed of the progress of the convention, of the thinking of the delegates and of the reasons supporting the proposals made by the delegates.

The major responsibility for informing the voters will be that of the press. Full and accurate, day to day reporting of the progress of the convention will help give the people the understanding and sense of participation necessary as a basis for their acceptance of the new constitution.

THE ULTIMATE responsibility for the success or failure of the convention lies with each individual citizen. The first occasion for the exercise of this responsibility is the Sept. 12 election. Only if a substantial number of well informed citizens take the trouble to participate in the selection of the delegates will the convention itself be representative.

Citizen responsibility will not end with the Sept. 12 election, however. Citizens must make their views known to the delegates on issues which concern them.

Citizens must also keep themselves informed of developments in the convention, so that they will understand the proposals for revision which they must accept or reject.

FINALLY, CITIZENS must make an informed decision as to whether the proposed new constitution meets with their approval, and must implement that decision with their vote.

The opportunity for progress is great. Each of us has an important responsibility to use it wisely. I would be grateful for the privilege of serving as a delegate.
