Crosswalks may not have been named in honor of irritated pedestrians, but they do help everyone afoot to get across the street safely. Use a crosswalk when you can, even if you have to go a little out of your way to reach it.

An expected accident seldom happens. By anticipating what may be ahead on the highway and by being mentally and physically prepared for an emergency, you may greatly decrease your chances of being involved in an accident.

BITS OF BIRMINGHAM

Irving J. Minet, who with his wife and daughter live in Birmingham at 675 Poppleton, has just been made a vice-president of Chrysler Corp.; he also is a group executive and chief operating officer of Chrysler's foreign operations. He is only 47, and has come a long way in industry. He and his family are comparatively recent residents of our fair city.

A "Dear Santa" letter arrived at The Eccentric this week en route to the North Pole. It read: "Please bring me the pink doll that I saw in Birmingham today. Thank you, Kris."

"I see the salt men are here again," Birmingham City Commissioner William E. Roberts commented at the outset of this week's commission meeting. He noted the appearance of the representatives of the two firms submitting the low bids for rock salt for the coming winter's snow and ice control. When the bids came up for discussion, Mayor Florence H. Willett also noted the "annual appearance" of the two men.

No Improvement Yet Of Chester St.

Chester St. from Martin to Merrill in Birmingham will not be improved until the city plan board recommends what type of street it should be.

City commissioners decided Monday night to postpone action until a decision is reached as to whether Chester should be a normal business street or be an integral part of a peripheral highway around the central business district.

It is included in the recently completed Central Business District Development plan as part of a peripheral route.
