Insurance Client Runs Risk 'Til He Learns Special Lingo

I've always had great admiration for insurance agents because I fig- ure that anyone smart enough to understand an insurance policy must be pretty sharp. But under- standing the policy isn't their only talent.

Not only do they speak a lan- guage of their own but they also seem to have all the answers to every argument in the book. I found this out the other day when an agent finished a survey of my insurance.

"Gil," he said, "your limits on S & A are fine and your Major Med seems adequate I would suggest a PFP and that you increase your PD and BI . . ."

Unfortunately I didn't have the slightest idea what he was talking about and for all I knew he was speaking to me in Esperanto. What I really wanted to know was why my auto insurance went up every year even though I had never had an accident.

"JUST BECAUSE you've never had an accident makes no differ- ence at all," he said, almost scold- ing me for my clean record. "You see, auto rates are predicted on the long pull and your five-year record is hardly creditable. You may go along for 5, ten or even 15 years and never scratch a fender but still pay more every year. One of the reasons for this is that the kids are cracking up cars left and right, and since these losses are spread around, their experience is passed on to you."

"Yeah, I see," I said dolefully, "but why should I pay for the way teenagers rack up cars. Why can't they pay for the damage them- selves?"

He laughed patiently. "You're not being very realistic. Just how do you think a 16 or 17 year-old kid can carry the load for auto ac- cidents? After all, they don't earn much—a buck here and there for baby sitting or pumping gas but you can't pay for much insurance with that kind of dough. Why they're lucky if they earn enough to buy the gas."

body creams you. And if your car sits still long enough its bound to happen."

THANKS TO my agent's advice I'm moving to Snoodsville next week. I'll mean driving 40 miles a day but at least I'll be a moving target. I think I'll also join the kids in a little drag racing. If I'm going to pay for it I might as well get in on the fun.

MSUO to Take Part In Adult Seminar

Four area universities will be represented in the sponsorship of an adult seminar weekend on "Golden Ages of Civilization" to be held at Camp Tamarack on May 12 and 13.

The division of continuing edu- cation at MSUO, along with the university center for adult educa- tion, representing Wayne State University and the University of Michigan and Eastern Michigan University are jointly presenting the event. Scholars from all four universities will participate.

Registration for the seminar may be made by any interested adult until May 1 at MSUO.
