

Knowledge of English, Proper Tools Not Enough

If you thumb through any home and garden magazine today you will find pretty complete instructions on how to do things yourself.

Whether you want to build a stone wall, a patio, a fly pool or re-wire your house, the instructions are so clearly spelled out in black and white that you just can't miss. As the article says, "Anyone who can read English and has the proper tools can do the job."

Well, I can read English and I've got the proper tools, but by golly, I can't do all these jobs like an expert.

Even a simple thing like using a hand saw will throw me into a tailspin. The saw usually binds and buckles when it has reached the half way point and then I have a heck of a time getting it detached from the partly sawed piece of lumber. Then, when I try to saw it from the other side, the edge of the board clearly shows where I've had to make two attacks before I bulled my way through it.

EVEN DRIVING a nail is a major project for me. When I hit the nail with the hammer, one of three things happens: (a) the nail bends, (b) the nail flies out narrowly missing my eye or (c) the board splits.

My prize "do it myself" project was an outdoor fireplace. This job should have been a success because all I had to do was dig out the foundation and cement in the field-stones.

After I had finished the job and stepped back to admire it, I had to admit that this was truly a monument to my ability as a stone mason. It was unquestionably my finest hour. My joy was short lived, however, because by the time the following spring had rolled around the winter's frost had made a shambles out of my fireplace—a grim reminder of another Jorvik failure.

THERE ARE some people who just won't give up regardless of the results. A friend of mine, who is a clever C.P.A., considers himself clever at fixing electrical appliances. Thanks to his handiwork the clothes dryer makes ice cubes and his freezer dries his clothes. There's no picture on his television screen and the audio gives him nothing but police calls. He claims he could fix his TV set if he wanted to but he finds the police calls more interesting than most of the programs on the air today.

AS I SADLY contemplate my record of failures at being a jack-of-all-trades, I cannot help but think of my hardy ancestors who could tackle anything and get away with it.

For instance, my great grandfather who ran a barbershop at Cape Cod, Mass., before the Civil War not only would give a customer a close shave for a dime and an expert haircut for a quarter, but also wielded a clever scalpel. For fifty cents he'd lance a boil or remove rattle snake fangs and this included a half pint of whiskey as an anesthetic. I'm sure he wouldn't have hesitated to try an appendectomy if anyone suggested it.

ACTUALLY WE'RE 35cies at this "do it yourself" business as compared to our ancestors. The pioneer woman not only took care of her own family but doubled in brass as a midwife for the neighbors and at times pinch hit as a mortician. She could help repulse an Indian attack with her musket while she rocked the baby's cradle with one foot, at the same time keeping an eye on the squirrel stew which was cooking over the fireplace.

I have no quarrel with clever people who can turn their hand to anything. Of course, their cleverness does give me an inferiority complex, but I've learned to live with that situation for many years.

BUT THE WAY I look at it is this: If there weren't awkward clods like me around, there'd be no need for the yellow pages in the telephone directory. All the experts would have to go out of business thus forcing all of us to do everything ourselves. And if there's anything in this world I hate to do it's to try filling my own teeth—even with the proper tools.

Hosts Conference On Group Relations

Beginning Monday, a five-day institute on intergroup relations will be held at MSU.

The theme of the institute will be the understanding and reducing of conflicts between groups and individuals in suburban communities.

OTHER speakers at the institute will be Dr. Mel Ravitz, Detroit Councilman and associate professor of sociology, Wayne State University; Dr. Morris Weiss, chief psychiatric consultant, Oakland County Child Guidance Clinics; George Edwards, Detroit police commissioner, and Miss Esther Middlewood, chief of the education section, Department of Mental Health, State of Michigan.

The institute is planned for parents and adults serving with PTA's, social and religious agencies and youth-serving groups.
