Ted Blakeslee, 15-year-old outdoorsman from Birmingham, doesn't have to go to outer space to find unexplored domains. Blakeslee points to a map where he traveled last summer in the Ontario wilds.

"strong resistance (locally) to the Detroit tax."

"There is 'no question as to the legality of our making a contribution,' he declared.

ROBERTS SAID that "while I am sympathetic to the fiscal problems of Detroit and Michigan, there does seem to be a consensus of opinion that our citizens don't want to be taxed. I have been asked many times what we are doing."

Ingram said he is "sympathetic, too," but insisted that the legality of the tax be investigated prior to the spending of municipal funds.

"We aren't pre-judging the verdict by spending funds," Burum emphasized.

"WHAT IS the form of action of this group?" asked Ingram. "We can't sit idly by and take no action," said Roberts.

"I can't really argue against the position you've taken, but I do feel we should be doing something," Burum, stating that he had "no objection to determining in the facts," said he is definitely in favor of contributing to this organization, because "I think it should be done."

Commissioner Ralph A. Main agreed that "we should do something," but said the commission should be certain of any action taken.

A report will be forthcoming next week on the legality of the tax and what kind of action the tax committee has in mind.
