

There's Still Time For Dance Classes

The Southfield Department of Parks and Recreation still has openings in a social dance class instructed by Jack Barnes for boys and girls in the 10th and 12th grades. The 12 weekly meetings are scheduled for the McKinley School multipurpose room on Thursday evenings, with instruction in the fox-trot, swing, jitterbug and the cha-cha-cha.

Potpourri

by JULIE CANDLER
Special Writer

Any artistic and cultural nerve-endings I had are dead after last week end. Now I feel like pouring this week's Potpourri right down the drain.

First of all, we had 13- and 14-year-old guests for a birthday slumber party at our house this last week end. I liked the guests, but slumber parties shake me up worse than Khrushchev and Castro.

Then to top it off, there came a new sound to our house. It's called "Monster Mash" and it's sung by somebody and the Crypt-Kickers. They have recorded all the spook appeal of Frankenstein and Dracula, arranged to ripple your goose bumps to rock-and-roll rhythm.

If you turn this revolting ghoulash onto the other side, it will blast a "Monsters' Mash Party."

Well, anyway, the kids love it. As for me, I would love to mash it.

Who can write about the arts after a week end of that?

EVEN THOUGH I'm not really in a mood for the arts, I can report about a happier sound than rock-and-roll pleasing the ears of the writer and Mr. and Mrs. Walter F. Skinner of Lakewood Road, Bloomfield Township.

Maude Skinner's well-trained musical ear has helped her to be an accomplished concert pianist. She especially enjoyed this unusual sound.

We heard it at a northern Michigan lodge, a delightful spot called the Lost Lake Woods Club. The Skinners were visiting guests there on a recent week end when we saw them.

The sound we heard was the unusual, relaxing strains of no alarm clock, no telephone, no television, no radio and no air-raid siren. You hear that sound only in places like the north woods.

It was so delightful, says Maude, that when Walter and their hosts went out for golf, she stayed in.

Says Maude, "It was such fun just listening to nothing!"

IF YOU haven't heard already, some Bloomfield Art Association members are flying to Florence and a potpourri of other exciting Continental centers of art next spring. They have European correspondents lining up well-informed art guides and entree to studios and galleries the individual tourists seldom see.

WE HEARD this week from Mrs. Ben S. Smith, whose husband is quite artistic with a golf club. She asked us to tell you that you can still get choice seats for the Saturday Young Peoples' Concerts.

Season tickets for the best seats in Ford Auditorium are available, she advises. Mrs. S., of 1756 Melbourne, is Birmingham Junior League's representative to the committee on arrangements. (The League is one of the program's sponsors).

What the committee has arranged for is to thrill young audiences with a lasting enthusiasm for the good music played by the Detroit Symphony Orchestra.

There will be the orchestra and Don Gillis's "Alice in Orchestralia" on Nov. 17. The original television cast of "Amahl and the Night Visitors" performs with the orchestra Dec. 22.

Captain Kangaroo will tell the young concert-goers about "Fun with Music" on Jan. 26, and the Severo Ballet joins with the orchestra to present "Peter and the Wolf" on March 9.

The programs will delight young people from six up, says Mrs. Smith. She agrees that the concerts are a joy for the parents who go along.

They are at 11 a.m. and 2 p.m. Because they want "everybody to be able to go", the sponsors may add a 4 p.m. concert eventually, says Mrs. S.

Commission Established For Cooperative Education

Opportunity for 45,000 more students to go to college on the cooperative education plan is the goal announced by the newly-established National Commission for Cooperative Education.

This will be achieved by doubling the number of colleges and universities offering cooperative education. At present, 60 institutions have such programs, often called "work-study," and the Commission will work to convert another 60 schools within ten years.

"Cooperative education gives a student an education qualitatively superior in some respects to a conventional college education," said the chairman of the National Commission, Dr. Ralph W. Tyler, who is Director of the Center for Advanced Study in the Behavioral Sciences (Palo Alto, Calif.). "Cooperative students become more mature, and their records in graduate school and in employment show that cooperative education is a first-rate education." Dr. Tyler said these facts had been established in a recent two-year national study of this type of education.

TWO LOCAL residents serving on the commission are Kenneth A. Meade, manager of Educational Relations section, General Motors, and Cyrus R. Osborn, executive vice president, General Motors.

The National Commission estimates that 30,000 students are now enrolled in cooperative education programs, in which college students alternate periods of study on campus with periods of employment in full-time responsible jobs. The Commission aims to expand opportunities for this kind of education so that 75,000 students can enroll in such programs by 1972.

The Commission will request foundations and corporations to contribute $1,376,000 to support these activities in the next five years. A pledge of $175,000 has already been made by the Charles F. Kettering Foundation.

The program of the National Commission will interest and actively aid colleges and universities in adopting cooperative education. The activities serving higher education will include training of special personnel, supplying teams of specialists, holding regional meetings, publishing case studies.

"There are both educational and economic benefits for the institution that adopts cooperative education," Dr. Tyler stated.

Art

and art. Jones fell back on Matthew Arnold's definition of culture: "acquainting ourselves with the best that has been known and said in the world."

Art, said Jones, is a particular expression by persons of a particular psychological make-up in a particular way at a particular time.

IN HIS speech, Jones discussed support of art and the artist by outlining the role of art and the artist in society.

Originally said Jones, the artist had a center cultural position; he was "the voice of the gods" thus having a prophetic function, which obligated his tribe to support him.

Later he sank from a "prophetic" to a "contractual" status whereby he was kept alive by the ruler rather than the cult.

THIS SITUATION left him with four choices, according to Jones: to go into exile, to accept and approve his situation, to shrug off all political responsibility (as witnessed in "art for art's sake and devotion to "self-expression"), or to smuggle as much of himself as he could get away with into what he is hired to produce.

The artist will not be worthy of support "until he recognizes that art is shaped by the artist for the uses of society, not merely for self-expression," said Jones vehemently.

And, he said, "We must recognize and define the relation of the arts and culture to a democratic society."

THE ORFEON CHORUS OF COIMBRA

This is the first American tour of this large group of musical students from the Orfeon College which is the second oldest college in Europe. They have become known throughout Europe and South America as Portugal's Good-Will Ambassadors. This Chorus was established in 1880 and has been singing its way into the hearts of nations far and wide for many decades. Now for the first time these Black Robed Singers come to America to let us hear and enjoy the quality, clarity, and purity of their beautiful blending tenor voices. Inheritors of a proud tradition, youthful black-caped, romantic singers—this is the Orfeon of Coimbra.
