

Diet Plans Muddled By Vacation Spree

By RUTH VOGT
Special Writer

It's poor taste, very poor taste to be bringing up (in polite company) the rigors of this "dieting business." However, when a person resorts to, providing he wishes to contact about six dozen different people who declared over this past year:

"You are going about losing weight the sensible way. By not employing any lazy tactics such as 'pills or Metrelac, the pounds you lose will stay lost!"

SO BADLY do I desire to let those six dozen or so people in on a suddenly discovered fact:

"Folks, you were so wrong. You were not telling the truth." The pounds sliced off from daily exercise, no eating of sweets or gravies, nothing but salads and vegetables, plus more exercise either in the basement or on the front room wants never to begin again—to get thin.

IT BEGAN SO innocently. Who would find anything to fear in a mere trip up north for 10 days? What with wearing Bermudas and feeling quite proud that one needed not to carry a huge purse to cover up the bulges when one entered a restaurant for food gave the wearer of Bermudas a sort of "I've licked the problem" attitude. (It's never licked).

floor after everyone was in bed—do not remain off because the dieter did it the hard way!

The utter bewilderment of this situation confuses and discourages the person resort to, providing he wishes to contact about six dozen different people who declared over this past year:

"Would you like a hamburger and a side dish of French Fries?" These words were heard. They were heard. They were listened to also. Not many times. But enough. Even though the home-made pies were refused all along Route 52 and even onto the expressways for days on end, something must have happened.

The scales reveal the calamity. Now they do. Not then. The needle hardly quivered the first four days. And those seldom tasted hamburgers were so good!

FROM FRENCH fries it was so easy to slip over into the 'cracker field' as the miles slipped away beneath the wheels. After all, the distance to Copper Harbor from Marquette is long; the traveler, his mind intent on drinking in the beauty found all about, forgets to count the number of times the hand dips into the cracker box open on the seat.

Then what occurs to the thirst when it gets real hot along the road. Surely, one tall glass of root beer, every so often whenever gas was needed for car, wouldn't be noticed?

THE TRIP TOOK a lot of gas stops. That meant a lot of root beers. Still, optimism reigned. Everything was so delightful. (Especially the hamburgers. Many northern spots served nothing else.)

Coupling this jaunt with no exercise embraced, adding one long Labor Day week-end with hungry guests and what resulted? That's right. Not only must a big purse be lugged out again to hide the bulging pounds, one lost so painfully, but it must be declared to those six dozen wise folks who insisted "they wouldn't return, the pounds."

All of you . . . were . . . so wrong . . . They do return so fast. The address of this fact. It's bewildering, too.
