88% of B'ham Families On Upper Income List

(Special to the Eclectic) NEW YORK, Sept. 25 - What proportion of Birmingham families are now in the upper income brackets? How much of the local population remains in the low brackets? A nationwide survey of income distribution reveals that the city has more of its families in the "over $4,000" brackets and fewer of them in the low categories than have most communities in the United States.

LOCALLY, a progressive shift upward has been recorded for almost every group. A majority of the people have been moving steadily in recent years from one level to the next one higher up.

The results of the survey have been released by Sales Management in a copyrighted report that shows, for each area of the country, just what portion of its population falls within each of the income groupings.

The purpose is to give a better financial picture of each locality than is possible through its average income figure alone.

It throws light on what average income denotes - whether it represents earnings that are well distributed or whether it is unbalanced by a few families with very large incomes compensating for many others with poor incomes.

IN BIRMINGHAM, it appears, the average is high and the distribution relatively good.

In Birmingham, on the basis of last year's figures, 88.3 per cent of the households have disposable cash incomes of $4,000 or more after paying their Federal and state taxes.

That compares favorably with the situation elsewhere in the United States, where only 59 per cent of all households are in the "over $4,000" brackets. In the State of Michigan there are 66.8 per cent.

THE FIGURES do not do full justice to farm communities because they involve cash income only, which fails to take note of equivalent income in the form of lower food and other costs on the farm.

As to other income groupings in Birmingham, the report lists 14.7 per cent in the $7,000 to $10,000 bracket and 5.5 per cent in the $2,500 to $4,000 classification.

The rising economic status of the middle-income families is a favorable business indicator. Such a market produces more retail activity, particularly for durable goods, than does a market that may be higher, but not rising, according to a Federal Reserve Board study.

Seaholm High's Little Theater was the scene for the school's American Field Service Committee when it held a get-acquainted meeting last Thursday.

The committee invited all interested parents and students of all schools to attend this Parent Information night. Students were either sophomores or juniors.

The main purpose of the occasion was to acquaint interested parents how the program is conducted at Seaholm.

DAVID ZIMMER, the American Field Service exchange student from Chile, spoke at the meeting, as did Mrs. Robert Spencer, who outlined the program.

Mrs. Carol Darling explained how the program is conducted at Seaholm.

The meeting was open to the public, and printed material and applications were available. Those present also had an opportunity to talk with three foreign exchange students now attending Seaholm.
