Ironing Ignored; Birmingham Explored

The "People's Column" letter below prompts the reprinting of this article by a Birmingham housewife who tells what it is she loves about her city.

By RUTH VOGT
Special Writer

Found deep in the recent article on Birmingham's CBD, was the sentence explaining that: "The Citizens Committee is an official group of about 15 people who have been attempting to determine what are the traditional values and characteristics of Birmingham."

Right there the cellar steps were ignored by which they'd lead me to a huge basket of dampened post-holiday ironing. Right at that sentence the rest of the paper was dropped, and a voice seemed to whisper:

"O.K. GAL, that's a really good thought to get your teeth into. What's stopping you except a big basket of ironing? Nothing was so, let's dig it, as our adolescents might retort.

My town I love because it's mine. "Oh, come now. Everyone else living in their particular hamlet would declare the same fact," you would say. That's true. But, wait here, let me list the things that drop into my mind to back up this affection.

I love it every time I drive through its many beautiful residential streets and on down through the main streets of town where outstanding shops show their faces everywhere I look.

NOT ONLY on the main streets; right through to the side areas do the stores stand out in distinction. I love my town for its many different churches. I love my town for all its kinds of schools. I cherish it because an excellent library transports me "off into another world" the minute its steps are climbed and its big doors are opened.

I love the unique old houses sitting so snugly around the area of my library. Each time they are passed they are never ignored. They are studied, and covered the flowers and shrubs surrounding their neat porches are watched and admired for their "correctness" in the way they find themselves in.

I love . . . our park. I love it in the winter; I love it in the fall, spring and summer. I love to see people sitting on the benches. I like to see young people walk through it.

WHAT ABOUT our back roads.

point out, one sales person who isn't gracious, attentive and charming, and I'll give a gold bug filled with the latest trading stamps to that person. In 10 years, in many hundreds of hours shopping, none has been uncharitable so far. Yes—I guess, just off hand, these are the things—

I SO LOVE about my town. What else but "tradition and character" do these items listed fall under? Just hope that Committee of Fifteen remembers to list them.

Now that basket of ironing will be taken care of in much better spirits — Here I come, cellar steps. Real fast.

PEOPLE'S COLUMN
But, Ruth, You Forgot The Sales Lady 'Snob'

Dear Mrs. Vogt:

Your article titled "Ironing Ignored; Birmingham Explored," proved very entertaining to four fellow Birminghamites.

We didn't quite follow the gist of the whole article, but we came out dripping wet with honey and rose water.

Well, gal, you owe us each that "gold" box of trading stamps. Let us relate:

Birmingham, my dear, is not without the "attentive" sales lady who is capable of keeping you waiting, ignored and burning.

"We've also each run into one of Birmingham's "charming" sales ladies who will approach you slowly, look you up and down and ask in the town's typical dialect (deep voice and all): "Could ah help you, please?"
