EARLY ARRIVALS SEEK REFUGE IN SUNNY LIVING ROOM

Teacher-Advisor Is Honored

Over 600 people attended a tea Sunday honoring Carolyn Wolfstein Levin of City and Country School, Bloomfield Hills. But when the invitations were first received, a number of them did a double take and raced to the phone—to be sure that this was really "Curly" Levin.

It's been so long since she's been called anything but "Curly," people had to make sure. So, for weeks, the phone at the Levin home on Franklin Road rang and rang, while even the recipient of the calls was trying hard to get used to seeing her formal name again—and also to the idea that her 15 years as teacher and advisor with City and Country should warrant such a fuss.

THE FORMALITIES and occasion were leaving a woman who has been listed in the International Who's Who and the Who's Who of American Women for many years.

She has distinguished herself in many ways by being an authority on what's what for three young sons. Education of the post school child has been her proudest professional field.

100 Travelers Plan Trip Around Globe

By ELIZABETH YATES
MI 6-1682

When the group of 100 Birmingham, Bloomfield and Grosse Pointe residents depart in March on the world trip with the John Kinseys of Hyland drive, they will be prepared.

Since September, groups have been meeting to study the countries they will be visiting and their customs. They have also been meeting at evening parties. The last of the series of parties are now being hosted. On Saturday the Chaotic Straps of Sandingham Way greeted their guests in Japanese costumes. The John Kinseys were in oriental costumes and other guests were dressed in the costumes of the countries they will visit. Cocktails and oriental foods were served by the hosts.

THE GENE BOWLES OF

Green Lake entertained 60 of the travelers at a Sunday brunch. Even though the Les Jons of Farmington won't be going along on this trip they will be participating at a cocktail and dinner party for the group. Their party is slated for the evening of March 9. The "Kinsey tour group" will be departing from the U.S. on March 22.

THE HOWARD L. BEERS OF

Burnley Drive will be leaving Friday for New York and then on an ocean hop to Genoa, Italy, where they will begin a two-week eastern Mediterranean cruise. They will be stopping at many ports on the scenic journey.

Arriving home for the weekend before their departure was their son, Louis, a freshman at Harvard University. Accompanying Louis was a friend from Radcliff, Dana Smith of Lupton, Pa.

A graduate of Vassar, she became affiliated with Merrill-Palmer School in Detroit when she first arrived in these parts as the wife of Abraham J. Levin, attorney, and a young mother of a five-year-old. The Levins have lived on Franklin Road, just north of the village and Cider Mill, since 1930.

In the ensuing years she has raised five children of her own and taught and guided legions of pre-school aged children and their bewildered parents—first at Merrill-Palmer and then at City and Country School. And she still had a place in her heart to offer a home to a foster child snatched from the furnaces of purgatorial Europe during the war.

AS SHE SERENELY greeted a steady stream of guests and well-wishers Sunday, Curly looked radiant in a gray blue wool dress her daughter, Mrs. Harold Edelstein of New Rochelle, N.Y., had made and brought for her. Obviously delighted to see so many old friends, Mrs. Levin also rejoiced in the reunion of all but one of her four sons. On hand were Jack, a lawyer in Detroit, with NBC's documentary

Among the many words of glowing affection that were said Sunday, perhaps George Roper's tribute was most pertinent. "Curly is a person who values moral standards, yet she would never renege them to a child or dismiss a child because it would not live up to them."

"It is the secret of a good teacher to be a moralist without being moralistic. To understand with empathy the depth of immorality without lowering one's own moral principles. Curly is a teacher not because of what she teaches but because of what she is."

THOUGH CURLY IS NO longer

actively teaching, she will continue to function as an advisor for the school she helped to launch and, together with her husband, A. J., now retired, she will devote her time to writing, thus enlarging the scope of her influence on the leaders of tomorrow.

Being proud of a personal achievement is a widespread trait in human nature. Being the possessor of various, too, is also evident among human beings. But to be vainly proud is the mark of weakness. . . for one such trait really militates against the other, with the weaker one assuming the most importance. Pride, tempered with suitable humility, is a reasonable goal, self-esteem, self-reliance are its offspring.
