PUZZLE NO. 746

Behind the Welcome Mat

by CORINNE ABART

Every once in a while as I am buying cat food for our Tuffy or wiping her muddy tracks off a table, I ask myself—what good are cats, anyhow?

I mean, once upon a time cats served farmers and householders as four-footed mousetraps, but today in the well populated areas, we seem to be long on cats, but short on mice.

Instead of being useful to us, she concentrates on making us useful to her. She meows vehemently if her food is not served on time or if it is not to her liking and she demands to go in and out of doors at her convenience, not ours. She doesn't come when called except at mealtime and she hasn't a single trick to perform for visitors unless you consider walking across the mantle, often to the horror of non-cat owners, a trick.

WHEN SHE tires of this game, she will switch to being an indolent, furry blob, daydozing for hours in a sunny window—too lazy to open her eyes more than slit wide. For exercise in this state she does what our kindergarten describes as "slobbering along in the downspouts". So sometimes she spends a whole morning pitterpatter slowly back and forth across the garage roof. For a change of pace she will hang nonchalantly from an upstairs screen.

My neighbor reports that after watching some squirrels play in the trees, Tuffy decided to become one of them. She flew through the trees with the greatest of ease for some two days before giving this act a rest.

I guess we like her just because she is useless, unpredictable, unfunctional—a kind of animated objet d'art. Something no home should be without.
