Tourist Year

Hotel and resort facilities, and increased public campground facilities. Expanded promotional activities on the state, regional and local levels—resulting in more advertising and publicity for Michigan's vacation opportunities.

FURLONG SAID expansion of the council's promotional programs brought good results during the autumn travel season and the early portion of the 1962-63 winter season, but the full effect of the council's increased advertising cannot be measured until the 1963 spring-summer campaign is completed.

The state legislature appropriated $545,000 to the council for its activities during the fiscal year which began July 1, 1962—an increase of $124,000 over the previous year's budget.

While statewide tourist business showed increases, Furlong said changing traffic patterns brought large shifts to some communities.

"THE GREATER capacity of freeways for traffic volumes, speed and safety means these limited access highways are drawing travelers from some of the older routes," he said. "This can be quite beneficial to communities close to the freeways, while less-conveniently located areas may lose some 'pass-through' business."

Despite these variations, Furlong said Michigan's new freeways give a "tremendous boost" to the state's tourist potential.

"Our excellent system of freeways and other state highways permits tourists to reach their vacation destinations quickly and safely," he said. "With adequate informational signs, our highways will continue to encourage even more recreational travel."

Several communities are counteracting the traffic pattern shifts by stepping-up their promotional efforts to attract tourists, Furlong said, through activities of chambers of commerce and regional tourist associations.

Enrollment Limited For Evening Class

The only evening classes for adults in drawing and painting, sponsored by Cranbrook Academy of Art Galleries, will begin the spring term on Mar. 26. Applications are now being taken at Cranbrook.

The class meets on Tuesdays from 8 to 10 p.m. for 10 weeks with a variety of media being considered. Enrollment in the class, which is planned specifically for the advanced amateur, is limited to 25. Donald C. Willett, painting instructor at Cranbrook Academy of Art who also studied for a year at the University of Paris under a Fulbright grant, is the instructor.

CON-CON REPORT

Law Professor Hopes Court Will Guide Apportionment

Those who interpret the U. S. Supreme Court decision in the Baker vs. Carr case as a precursor to "one man, one vote" in the districting of all legislatures are going against the weight of a score of lower court cases decided since the high court ruling.

So writes Jerold Israel, assistant professor of law at the U. of M. in the current issue of the Michigan Law Review.

It is Prof. Israel's hope that the when the deviations are based upon "rational" justifications.

Only one and possibly two lower courts have accepted the "practical equality" standard. Four of the U. S. Supreme Court justices have indicated they would not accept such a standard, Israel says.

The overwhelming majority of courts dealing with apportionment cases have looked to reasons other than population in reaching decisions, the law professor writes.

"IN GENERAL, THESE reasons are founded upon the concept of granting special political security to minorities, particularly the inhabitants of the more remote and sparsely populated sections of the state," he says.

This, in essence, is what the proposed new Michigan constitution provides in its sections dealing with apportionment of the state senate.

With its flexible formula which bases representation 80 per cent on population and 20 per cent on area and economic interest, the proposed Michigan document recognizes that the state's 79 legislative counties should have effective representation in the upper house of the legislature.

In these counties live about 47 per cent of Michigan's population. There was unanimous bipartisan agreement in the convention that for-county lines should be respected in drawing legislative districts.
