Oakland Team Assists Latin Land Program

WASHINGTON — A four-man Oakland County team will help a South American region prepare for future growth under a unique new approach, announced Cong. William S. Broomfield (R-Oakland County) last week.

Broomfield said the group will assist Cali, Colombia, and the neighboring Cauca Valley in land use planning and industrial development.

The team will leave for South America May 14 after a day's briefing in Washington. Three days will be spent at Bogota, Colombia, with the National Planning Board and three weeks will be spent in the Cali region.

NAMED FOR the three-week study mission were Delos Hamlin, chairman, Oakland County Board of Supervisors; D. B. Varner, chairman, Oakland University; George N. Skrubbs, director, Oakland County Planning Commission, and George Catlin, director area development, Detroit Edison Co.

The Oakland County team will base its plans upon a region about the size of Oakland County.

"And I think we will come up with more meaningful results more easily understood by everyone," Broomfield said.

Easlick Quits S'field Job As Assessor

Southfield Assessor Gerald Easlick has resigned his position. In a letter to Mayor S. James Clarkson, Easlick said that he was tired of fighting with the council, the city administrator and the public. In resigning, Easlick defended his assessments and reportedly asked the council to bring up issues concerning the new assessment and land appraisal program just prior to the city's general election April 1. Voters elected Clarkson and four of five incumbent councilmen.

In his letter to Clarkson, Easlick charged the board of review with eight irregularities in operation and said he hoped the state tax commission would retain the assessments he had set down.

According to Clarkson, Easlick believes the board may lower some assessments. The two men contend that the council desires to kill the new assessments at least on Southfield's largest commercial and industrial taxpayers. In the campaign, the mayor said he wanted immediate effect of the new assessments. Council members campaigned for delaying the assessments' effects.

Easlick decided to put the Clem-inshaw Co. report, reappraising land values in the city, into effect just before the election. The assessor said he did so after the council failed to indicate what they wanted done with it.

EASLICK SAYS the report is honest with most of the increase being on commercial property owners and developers of land. The company is located in Cleveland, O. Easlick was assessor in Southfield and Southfield Township before most of it was incorporated as a city.

Deputy Assessor William Meier will take Easlick's place until Clarkson appoints a new assessor.

"No sir, we don't want taxpayers' dollars for our church school!"

It violates the Constitution, it undermines our American tradition of Separation of Church and State!

... says ORVILLE D. WRIGHT District Superintendent, West Side Seventh Day Adventist

"Of course it would be nice to have money for our school — especially in these days when a school has to buy so many things and today's dollar brings so little. But we would rather go it on our own. We believe private money should be for private schools, and public money for public schools."

We agree with Superintendent Wright that private and parochial schools should not expect public funds to run their schools. And this is why:

First, it would be contrary to American law and the American principle of Separation of Church and State. The framers of the Constitution thought this so important they made it the First Amendment. And these men, let's remember, were friendly to religion.

Many Supreme Court decisions have affirmed the Separation Principle. Here's a quotation from a recent decision in the Everson case the Court said:

No tax in any amount, large or small, can be levied to support any religious activities or institutions, whatever they may be called, or whatever form they may adopt to teach or practice religion.

What could be clearer—in meaning or intent?

And that leads to a second point. Parochial schools exist to teach or practice religion. They want to promote one faith — their own. This is true of all parochial schools — whether Lutheran, Seventh-day Adventist, Catholic, Jewish, Episcopal, etc. Parochial schools are in no sense public schools.

Certainly we shouldn't ask a Methodist to pay taxes to educate a student as a Lutheran. We couldn't tax Jewish parents to raise somebody else's boy a Baptist. Americans already pay for one school system. To ask them to support a second school system would be to tax them twice — double taxation.

Do we discriminate? Is it discrimination if public money goes to public schools but not to church schools?

By no means. The public schools are public institutions serving all Americans — not selected groups. Those who don't use public schools are still taxed to maintain them — just as they maintain a fire department or police force even if they don't use them.

This includes millions of taxpayers who pay but have no children — childless married couples, for example, or bachelors, or single women. They do not feel unjustly taxed, or discriminated against.

Of course you have a right to run your own fire department, or hire your own detective, or operate your own school. But you have to pay for it. This is certainly reasonable.

And what could be more American!

No time to wander Speaking of America, this is a crucial time in our history. It is no time to change our Constitutional way, or to wander from the wisdom of our Founding Fathers. It is a time, instead, to stick to the principles that have made this country great.

We cannot do this if we undermine the traditions that are as old as America. We must keep Church and State separate — for the good of both.

Public money must go only to public schools.

This paid advertisement is run as a public service to acquaint Americans of all faiths with the origin of our freedoms.

We cannot tax Americans to support churches or church schools. You can back the organization that's defending this constitutional principle by sending your check to:
