Sacred Heart Aids Area Blind Residents

By PATRICIA SHANNON
Special Writer

Each year the Sacred Heart Alumnae Association sponsors a day of recreation for the blind citizens of Detroit and its suburbs. On Palm Sunday the academy was host to a large group and members of the high school came to help—guiding, cheering, and serving lunch to their guests.

Another phase of the school's Catholic action program is carried on each week. The Ladies' Bureau of Elizabeth Moore.

This Easter colorfully decorated baskets filled with candy were delivered to needy children. Tomorrow a group of Mexican children will visit the school for an Easter egg hunt on the grounds.

In the ACADEMIC field enthusiasm is flourishing also. Three essays from each of the high school classes were sent in to a regional contest. Those whose works will represent the school are Betsy Burns, Candace Quail and Patricia Shannon in the senior class; Debra Burns, Susan Burdick and Teresa Plak in the junior class; Margery Ahlberg, Mary Pat McLaughlin and Jill Ceyling in the sophomore class; and Cynthia Gray, Marne Russo and Kathleen Sehn in the freshmen class.

In chemistry, the exhibits of Betsy Burns, Sharon Just and Linda Stevenson qualified in the Derby Floor Fair for display at the Metropolitan Science Fair at the University of Michigan.

The Barnum water ballet is over. Called the "U. N. Spectacular," this year's ballet was quite a spectacle. The title is derived from the show's international theme. There were 15 acts, each one supposedly from a different country.

The show began with a dazzling effect of spotlights focused on ripples water, which showed up quite well on the opposite wall. When the lights were turned out, it became obvious that the huge map of the world on the far wall was done in fluorescent paint. This created quite a scene.

STUDENT COUNCIL president Diane Zube was the narrator of the show, and she made as if conducting the United Nations meeting, each country saying its piece in the form of an act.

The high point of the show was the long-in-the-heck version of a water ballet presented by 12 members of the Barnum swimming team, prettily adorned in bikinis. This was supposedly the Russian entry.

The show was well-planned and well-presented, due in part to the careful scenery and elaborate costumes.

Starting for Barnum students on Good Friday, April 12, was the opening of the "Spring Fever." These 10 days of lazy bliss are commonly known as spring vacation. And this year it didn't come a day too late.

Students in classes can be observed staring vacantly out of windows, taking a sudden interest in the opposite sex, and perhaps thinking of things other than their studies.

Any homework that teachers may assign to be done over vacation will be "left over" until the night before school reconvenes. Because of the enervating vacation I guess I will not be called upon to write a column for next week's paper. I hope you are not too disappointed.

PROGRESS IS coming along steadily in the final process of assembly. This consists of pasting the picture of every student in the "proof copy" just so, since this will be the model for all the yearbooks.

However, this uninspiring work is necessary. Included in the "final proof" will be many "candid" shots taken by the school's roaming photographer, Mr. Blum.

As there is a certain amount of danger in being photographed by Mr. Blum, Mr. Blum is a rather feared person around Barnum. Such phrases as "Cheese Mr. Blum!" are not uncommon.

He made it clear to BCDS students that by extending friendliness to foreign students and other visitors to the United States every individual American could help improve the intercultural relationships between countries of the world.

College Day Is Set by Oakland U

Some 400 high school juniors, their parents and counselors are expected to spend a day at Oakland University May 4, getting answers to their questions about college and college admissions.

The affair, a "college information day," is being held for juniors rather than seniors so that they can plan wisely for their last year of high school preparation.

The program will open at 10 a.m. with a session on college admissions requirements in which members of the admissions staff will discuss the topic and answer questions.

DISCUSSIONS ON testing programs, on financial aids (jobs, loans and scholarships), on major fields of study in college and on social and cultural activities in college will also be discussed.

All interested juniors and their parents who return postal cards that may be obtained from high school counselor may attend.
