Russ Ingham, sales manager of the Chevrolet Press, joined in helping to open the trout season last week end, a "ritual" he rarely misses. This year, his 15-year-old son, Fred, accompanied the 12-man party to the fly-fishing-only stretch of the Au Sable east of Grayling.

"The weather was a beautiful," Russ said. "But the fish didn't cooperate too well!"

A couple of weeks ago, on a legal golf course, Russ met a man and wife pair from Boston and later invited them to his home. It turned out that the wife was raised in England where her landowner father controlled seven miles of trout water.

"No, on the contrary, he didn't," the Englishwoman said. "Father didn't believe in just anybody fishing his river. When an Isaac Walton disciple appeared to ask permission to fish, he was put to a little test. A saucerful of water was set on the open lawn, and if from a respectable distance, the applicant failed to draw a fly within 12 inches of the saucer, then he didn't get to go any farther."
