Red Cross Dep't Helps Families Of Servicemen

The home service department of the American Red Cross helped 18 local families solve problems connected with the Armed Forces during the past year.

The home service department provides communication between servicemen and their families during times of emergency and brings help where it is needed.

A local man was injured when a jack slipped from a car under which he was working at his filling station. His oldest son was in the Army in Hawaii.

The Red Cross was notified and informed the son of his father's injury. The son was soon home on leave to run the filling station until his father recovered.

Another serviceman wrote to his mother that on his way home on leave he would detour into Mexico for a few days sightseeing.

When the son did not arrive home as expected, the mother called the Red Cross, who checked Red Cross chapters and military installations along the route.

The Red Cross' communication system and government regulations covering its relations to Armed Services make it possible for the organization to bring comfort to families of servicemen.

Get Ready for Camp, Says Medical Group

Summer camp season is approaching again. If your boy or girl is planning on going to camp this year, it's time to start getting ready.

First, of course, select a camp. This depends on several factors, such as how much you can afford, do you want a camp nearby, or some distance away, do you want a camp for boys or girls only, or a co-ed camp? Most cities and larger towns aren't far from a Scout or Y camp that charges only nominal fees. Or, there are the private camps in the mountains that cost much more.

Make your choice of camp, then fill in the registration forms and get them in the mail promptly. The better camps fill up early.

FIND OUT about the camp's health and safety provisions. Will the staff have pre-camp health examinations, including kitchen and maintenance personnel? Is there a doctor or registered nurse on duty at all times? Is the food prepared under sanitary conditions? Are menus planned by a trained dietitian? Does the camp have a well equipped infirmary? Are all campers required to have a physical examination and a physician's certificate?

Most camps on the approved list of the American Camping Association will meet all of these health requirements. And you certainly have the right to be particular when your child's safety and health is involved.

Arrange with your physician for your child's pre-camp checkup now. The doctor may find a minor health problem that can be corrected before camping time. An important factor in selecting a camp is to make certain that the size level fits your child. The announced age span covers a wide range of years, but in most camps the children are of roughly the same age. Find out whether your child will be assigned to a group in his own age bracket.

THE SWIM periods are a highlight of the day at most camps, and almost all of them have qualified water safety instructors in charge of swimming, with trained lifeguards as assistants. If your child cannot swim, the daily training at camp will be a good way to learn. But don't take the water-safety arrangements for granted. Make certain the pool or lake is as safe as possible.

As possible, talk with the camp director and one or two of the counselors. Let them tell you about the camp program, and then decide for yourself whether the camp is right for your child.
