History of Cavell Relayed by Camper

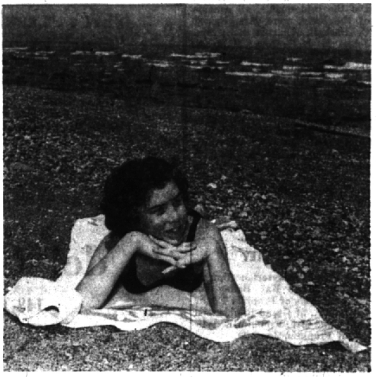

Twelve girls from the Birmingham area took off Sunday for YWCA's Camp Cavell on Lake Huron for the first camping session of the season. Dates for the next three sessions are July 14-27; July 28-Aug. 10, and Aug. 11-24.

The local group included Debbie Bartlett, Jeannette Cogsdill, Susan Dunn, Suzanne Grayson, Marsha McDaniel, Martha MacAloon, Jeannie Mullen and her sister Priscilla; Kay Sullivan, Debbie VanDessel, Carol Zeis and Katherine Fitzgerald.

Katherine had attended a press party at Cavell before opening day, returning to Birmingham with the following history from a folder published in 1938.

BACK IN 1914, far removed from the destructive din of the battlefields of Europe, a whole new world of adventure and excitement was opened up for 30 Detroit girls in a camp sponsored for two weeks by the Girls' Work Department of the Detroit Young Women's Christian Association.

Elizabeth Lake was the setting, and the program featured "rising, scripture and prayers around the flag pole, meals, inspection twice a day, sports and swimming, quiet hour, closing camp fire, and so to bed at nine o'clock." Borrowed tents comprised its meager equipment.

From this simple beginning the Detroit YWCA school girls' camp progressed through seasons of three, four, six and eight weeks from various temporary sites—Tecumseh on Lake St. Clair (1915), the Grindley farm on Long Lake, notable for the luxury of wooden floors in the tents (1916-17), Oxley on Lake Erie where the custom of entertaining parents was inaugurated with a camp circus (1918).

In 1919 at the Carrigan site on Lake Huron (1919-21) the enterprise was christened "Camp Cavell" in honor of Nurse Edith Cavell whose heroic patriotism so fired the imagination of the girls of the post-war period. Sleeping tents for 123 campers were set up along "Cavell Boulevard," and for the first time a permanent though primitive recreation-dining building was erected.

IN 1922 CAMP CAVELL was moved north to Lakeport. Here "Kamp Kavell Knoos" flourished weekly, and many traditional camp songs were written. Riding and creative arts were introduced, an Indian tribal organization effected and the first differentiation in age groups made.

Proceeds of the Women's Building Fund made possible the purchase, in 1927, of Camp Cavell's present site on Lake Huron, when 20 acres with 1,000 foot frontage were bought four miles north of Lexington. By July, 1927, a spacious recreation lodge, crafts wigwam, a few cabins and a temporary dining hall were ready for camp Cavell's 14th season.

By its 25th season, in 1938, each year had seen additional building and equipment—the Log Cabin and Tepee, dining hall, dock and float, tennis courts, health unit, stables, shower house and cabins accommodating 135 campers.

Twenty years later, in 1958, a much-needed "face lifting" at Cavell was made possible by a $90,000 fund allocated to the YWCA of Metropolitan Detroit by the Metropolitan Detroit Building fund.

Before camp opened that year, many improvements had been accomplished:

The main road leading into the grounds from the highway was newly graded and gravelled. A new riding ring was built. Eight spacious cabins, each housing seven girls and a counselor, were added to the Brookside unit for girls 13 to 16 years old. These cabins were located on a 10-acre tract purchased through a gift to the YW by the late A. H. Sarver, who was a member of the YWCA Board of Trustees.

ALSO LOCATED ON "The Acres"—the name given the new land—was a staff house called "Crane Cottage" as a sentimental gesture to the past and also because its furnishings were made possible by funds earmarked for that purpose when the Lake Orion site was sold early in the 1940's. (The Detroit YWCA operated a camp for employed girls at Lake Orion and a cottage for their use was built from money given by Mrs. Grace Whitney Hoff, the YW's first president, and was named for her.)

Complete with bedrooms, a comfortable living room, laundry facilities and a kitchen, all overlooking the lake, the cottage offers respite to camp staffers on days and hours off duty.

Three new unit houses for Brookside, Northwood and Southwood units were built. Each has a large recreation room with picture window and globestone fireplace, plus kitchenette for preparation of snacks. The Northwood and Southwood unit houses were winterized and equipped with heaters in addition to the fireplaces for year-round outings by YWCA and other groups.
