

Cranbrook Gallery: Showcase for Academy

"The Cranbrook Art Gallery is the voice of the art academy," says Wallace Mitchell, director of the gallery and registrar of adsions at the Cranbrook Academy of Art. Exhibitions shown in the gallery are generated by the interest of the art students. Mitchell feels that what will suit the students' and varied tastes should also please the enlightened gallery-goer.

BIANNUAL STUDENT exhibitions in the same spot are now shown in shifting relationships. In planning a recent fragment show from the Booth collection, Mitchell made his selection from the photographic file of the gallery's art works. One piece listed was discovered in a niche he had passed daily for 25 years! It became a new experience to see it in a different setting.

CRANBROOK HAS an impressive reputation in the art world. Students of top ability from all over the world have always been selected from the portfolios of art work they submitted. This has insured the widest range in experience as the students study intensively with the instructors as well as learning much from each other.

Bachelor and Master of Fine Arts degrees are offered after preliminary academic work done elsewhere. ONE STRANGE RESULT of this system is that the art academy is better known in Sweden, India, New York or California than in Birmingham. The students are creative contributors to the art world but rarely mix in local town activities.

They are deeply involved with the one time in their lives that they can examine every phase of art and their own abilities without the ordinary pressures of the Christmas student sale, recent American watercolors, an Art Academy faculty show and selected shows for children. Wallace Mitchell and Mary Rior-

Main characters from the Kingswood Day Camp's production of "The Wizard of Oz" were portrayed by Kathy Adams, 931 West Harsdale, Bloomfield Hills, the Tin Man; Allyson Brown, 1825 Villa, Birmingham, the Cowardly Lion and Anne Peterson, 26825 Irving, Franklin, the Scarecrow. The play, staged Aug. 2, was the final event for the camp, held on the campus of the Kingswood School Cranbrook for girls aged six through twelve. The camp program includes a wide range of activities, all of which are supervised by experienced adult counselors.

everyday work-a-day world. Such hard work and introspection doesn't make for the most gregarious neighbors. The students enjoy their ivory tower and deserve the chance it affords.

THE PEOPLE of the community do have a limited number of opportunities to become involved with Cranbrook; most are provided by the gallery. Future scheduled shows include "Arts in Africa," the annual dan, a former academy design student, accumulate and hang these shows. Mitchell is noted for the excellent displays he has designed for the Art in Religion shows.

Outstanding in stature are the children's classes conducted by Glenn Michaels in the gallery. Exhibitions of the art work he is able to draw from the children are a delight to see.

Tours of the Young Peoples Art Center are given for school groups by the gallery volunteers.

An adult class in painting is held in the gallery by the same instructor who works with the talented academy students. This class furnishes the opportunity for serious local painters to advance their study.

CRANBROOK'S buildings and grounds are noted far and wide as among the most beautiful to be found. On week ends touring admirers from everywhere see apparently silent buildings. But inside the students are industriously working—even on Sundays—to contribute to our future artistic heritage.
