School bells are ringing for sixth grade students of Eastover School at Proud Lake Conservation Camp this week. This is the first year the Eastover group has gone to the educational camp in the fall. The week began Sunday with an "open house" at the camp when families deposited the luggage on Monday morning. The students met their teachers at Eastover School and departed by bus for five days at Proud Lake. The educational program operates in the areas of arithmetic, language arts, fine arts, physical education, social studies and science.

A SPEAKER from the Oakland County Sheriff's Department will talk on "water safety"; three graduate students from Wayne State University, counselors at the camp, will work with the students in geology; and Harley Thornton, naturalist from the State Conservation Department, will be there one full day.

NOTE: Be sure to rake vigorously to remove the dead grass (thatch) from the areas to be seeded so that the seed may be imbedded in the soil.
