Icy, Markers Date Back to the Bible

A device used to guide travelers is biblical in origin, helping motorists driving on Michigan freeways north to south and east to west, and guide travelers in biblical times and modern times still use them.

They were used on many roads in 19th century until the 1930s when highway maps became popular. But their use declined after the development of GPS and internet navigation services.

Today, the freeways-the most advanced kind of road in the world—are backed up by the modern intelligent transportation system to guide the interstad.
