Automotive Engineers Honor E. A. Thompson

Dr. Paul S. Carney, president of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, has announced that a special committee of the Society has selected J. E. A. Thompson as the 1950 recipient of the Society's award to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the discovery of the automobile. The award will be presented to Thompson at the Society's annual meeting in St. Louis early next year.

Thompson, who is 86 years old, was born in 1877 in New York City and was educated at the City College of New York and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. He has been a member of the Society for more than 50 years and has served as its president from 1939 to 1940.

The award is one of the highest honors given by the Society, and it is presented annually to an engineer whose work has made a significant contribution to the advancement of the automobile industry.
