the dubious banner and theory of asserting or demonstrating "rights."

To help solve the problem, Judge Moore proposed "a well-grounded movement to protect the now fearful and sadly-abused general law-abiding public from crime and law violation from the unrepentant, intentional and highly protected vicious action of law violators."

HE THEN listed three steps that could be taken: "We can afford most more intensive educational programs to train our police officers in the field of utilizing lawful means of arrest and lawful search and seizure."

"We can arouse the general public to aid law enforcement instead of being passive or even antagonistic."

"We can institute a constitutional amendment, both national and state-wide to permit search of automobiles at reasonable times and with reasonable purpose over and beyond the present rules and for the explicit purpose of greatly retarding the felon's free use of his means of carrying contraband and making his 'get-away.'"

The Judge called for more alertness and action on the part of the citizen, adding that it is "more important than ever" to make law enforcement on the local level more efficient.

Spies Play Important Role Around Seaholm

By KATHY PORTER

A small, seedy-looking character stalks anxiously through the halls, expertly slipping in and out of the shadows and peering through the cracks in the door. To his associates he is only known as No. 24.

It is just one man in the interweaving tangle of spies caught up in the infamous operation which in code stands for Field Day Interclass Spy Headquarters.

Interclass is steadily mounting, with only seven more days until Field Day Interclass begins. Secret meetings are being more frequent, but still certain informants leak, due to the efficiency of No. 24 and his associates.

The struggle for each class to keep one jump ahead of the others has become more intense. Secret meetings are being more frequent, but still certain informants leak, due to the efficiency of No. 24 and his associates.
