has taken her to many spots on the globe. "I was in Russia two years ago. I mostly stayed in Moscow but also gave concerts in the south. Music there—they consider it like we do big-league baseball."

She played in Italy, Paris, Canada and Mexico, too. She finds traveling "very exciting, even in this country."

Miss Dubow said her mother plays the viola, father the piano and two younger brothers and a sister the violin, cello and piano, respectively.

"I BEGAN the violin at the age of four and gave concerts by seven or eight. I played at Carnegie Hall at 11. I went to regular school, though, and never talked about my music there."

Of her career plans at present, Miss Dubow said, "I'm just playing as much as I possibly can."

After the concert in this area, she was scheduled to return to New York the very next day. A tour on the West Coast, then of the South are slated, with isolated concert and recital dates in between.

The artist's favorite composer is Bach, and she particularly admires the "great Russian violinist Oistrakh."

Miss Dubow has received rave reviews from the New York Times; Tass, the Soviet news agency; and other leading sources.

HER SOUTH Oakland Symphony program was selected by conductor Dunlop and included a Sibelius concerto, honoring the Sebelius centennial.

Was she nervous for the concert coming up that night? A little, she said, but related that this can make your performance "more alive."

Beware of too sublime a sense of your own consequence.
