

Spring Bulbs Bring Reminder Of Crocuses at the Window

The ads for spring bulbs always tulips for a mass effect, it is in-look so enticing so we all succumb to the pleasure of planting them, to make looking forward to spring 1965 doubly joyful.

I always like crocuses near my bedroom window so I can about open raising the window shade: "Spring is here," when they come into flower. When you are planting

Mrs. Burlingame

MANY OF YOU will enjoy the pleasure of potting up bulbs, leaving them outdoors within a trench for seven cold weeks of weather, then bringing them inside for color in a sunny window.

The whole trick is to remember where you buried them under the snow (I wonder if the squirrels have trouble, too?) A person who does this trick can be identified as a master gardener. Your local bulb source can give you a book-let on the method of forcing bulbs for the inside.

This is the time to take a few paper grocery bags with you for a hike in the fields and woods. Pick various frozen weeds and berries (hard ones, like the pips on a multiflora rose) and store them away for working with dried flower arrangements after the rush of holiday artwork. You will be looking for interesting shades of brown. The dried friends of a fern are good.

This might sound like an uninteresting field trip at this date, but you just wait until you are frosted-in during midwinter, then we will have some fun working with some of nature's free bounty.

NOW DON'T get upset if those geraniums keep losing their leaves. This is normal, and soon you shall have a new batch acclimated to indoor living.

For the last few weeks I have had butterflies in my tummy because I have been planning my first trip to Mexico, prompted by Mr. B's remark: "I am going hunting."

All over the house you see cards with Spanish words on them, books have been read, friends have been

Seek 1914 WSU Students for Honors

The Wayne State University College of Education Alumni Association is posting a "most wanted" list in a search for missing members of the class of 1914.

A golden anniversary tea is being planned in their honor on Dec. 3, at the Alumni House on campus. Graduates of January and June, 1914, from the Detroit Normal College, predecessor to the WSU College of Education, will receive 50-year certificates at the tea.

Graduates of 1914 or persons with information regarding missing class members are asked to contact Vera T. Mathes, chairman of the anniversary tea, at the Alumni House, 441 W. Ferry, Wayne State University.

Panama hats, long a source of sartorial satisfaction to well-dressed men and women throughout the world, owe nothing but their name to Panama. This popular summertime item is a product of Ecuador where the natives who make them by hand call them Montecristi.
